

Mark Stein

Mark Stein has been an executive coach, career development consultant, organisational consultant, and an academic for over 25 years.

For over a decade he held a Chair in Leadership and Management at the University of Leicester, and is currently Professor Emeritus of Leadership and Management there.

He is currently also an Associate Lecturer in Consultation and the Organisation at the Tavistock Clinic, London. These posts have involved much experience of coaching and consulting, as well as dealing with career issues and dilemmas.

Background and Consulting Experience

Mark's coaching and consulting experience involves helping individuals make the most of their talents in roles in organisations so that they may have productive and fulfilling work lives. This includes a particular focus on helping people identify, and find ways to address, areas of difficulty and anxiety in relation to their careers. His clients have included Walt Disney Television International, John Lewis Partnership, Aer Rianta and Trusthouse Forte, and he has undertaken coaching, consulting and leadership development at London Business School, Imperial College London, INSEAD Fontainebleau, Sandler Consulting, University of Leicester, and the Tavistock Institute and Clinic.

In his role as Director of the Leadership Module of the MBA at Imperial College London, he was also centrally involved in the individual career development of MBA students over a five-year period. He has also held posts at London School of Economics and the Tavistock Institute, as well as several visiting posts at INSEAD, Fontainebleau. He has worked with individuals in a wide variety of roles and at different levels, ranging from those in senior leadership roles to middle managers, recent graduates and students, as well as those seeking career change.
