consumers, and providing a platform for greater profit seeking endeavors. A global partnership of corporations and national governments may be the only way to exact great success in many of these goals, and therefore it is useful for policymakers and advocates for success of SDGs to consider the possibility of using the resources of corporations in a more formal way to meet these goals.

The Sustainable Development Goals, SDGs are a list of seventeen established goals that provide a roadmap for the international community to combat a variety of inequalities across the globe. Goal 1 is quite clear in that the list is aimed at reducing poverty in all forms, while there are other goals that are a bit more refined in their scope and direction. For example, Goal 12: ensure sustainable consumption and production patterns. As the author notes, Goals 1-4, 6, and 10 are useful as a roadmap, specifically as it relates to the books theme of investigating the corporate responsibilities on the matter. However following the SDGs alone will not resolve or illuminate the corporate responsibilities on socio-economic rights of the citizens of the nations they serve. Yet corporations could take up the mantle of checking the boxes of the various SDGs, engendering themselves with gLAWcal is an independent non-profit research organization (think tank) that aims at providing a new focus on issues related to economic law, globalization and development, namely the relationship between international economy and trade, with special attention to a number of non-trade-related values and concerns. Through research and policy analysis, gLAWcal sheds a new light on issues such as good governance, human rights, right to water, rights to food, social, economic and cultural rights, labour rights, access to knowledge, public health, social welfare, consumer interests and animal welfare, climate change, energy, environmental protection and sustainable development, product safety, food safety and security.

OUR MISSION

To collaborate with Government, Civil society and business community to balance the excess of globalization with Non Trade Concerns.

OUR GOALS

To influence policymakers, to raise awareness over Non Trade Concerns, to encourage stakeholder participation, and to disseminate gLAWcal's publication results.
