Weaving is a great metaphor for bringing Indigenous knowledge and its relevance in a contemporary world. How our ancestral teachings can be guiding values in our work life.

7 Sacred Values:

Love

To receive love and kindness from others, you have to give this to others first

Respect

Show honour and gratitude to all of the creation to show and earn respect

Courage

Face life and obstacles with a fearless heart, so what is right even if it is difficult

Honesty

Face your faults and mistakes with open eyes and learn from it

Wisdom

Use the knowledge that you have gained through your life to make good decisions

Humility

Understand and accept that we are all equal to each other, not better than others

Truth

Know these things, to speak them and to believe in them and in ourselves

What is Wraparound?

The Wraparound (WRAP) process is a holistic approach to health and social services delivery that ensures families and individuals with complex issues play active roles in developing their own care plans.

Wraparound planning uses a client driven, team based model, based on an individualized plan that uses the strengths of the participant and team members to develop strategies to effectively address their needs on a day to day basis. It brings in a holistic approach to human service delivery that fosters inter-sectoral collaboration, integration and collective community responsibility to support individuals and families dealing with multiple, complex health and social problems.

Why use the Wraparound Process?

- The Wraparound Process is respectful and responsive to clients, whether your client is an individual or a family.
- The process is efficient and effective because it makes better use of services and because it has a common plan
- The role of human service providers is changing from “experts” to “partners and facilitators”.
- It encourages clients to assume ownership and responsibility versus increasing dependency on human services.
- This process can be used in other sectors; it is “portable”.
