FAMILY CONVERSATIONS ABOUT RACE WORKSHOP

This workshop is intended for families who would like to talk about race with their children, but don't know how to have that conversation – or perhaps do not feel comfortable with how the topic has previously been shared within the family.

Dr. Jenn provides parents and caregivers with a variety of ways to begin and continue conversations about race and diversity. Whether there has been discomfort, fear or any other unsettling attitude surrounding the topic of race, Jenn provides a variety of tools and strategies such as: responses to children's questions, sample conversations, resources including children's books and toys, and more.

Jenn also provides adults with a range of tools and resources they can use to examine their own racial identity so they might better model an anti-racist perspective for their children.

Talking about race doesn't have to be uncomfortable. Dr. Jenn will give families the vocabulary, the tools, and the boost of confidence needed to have honest conversations about race.

The length of the workshop can be determined by the sponsoring organization (schools, community groups or churches).

All of Dr. Jenn's workshops are based on the 7 dimensions of well-being (cognitive, social, environmental, emotional, physical, spiritual and financial) and tailored to the needs of the family.
