KBHCCD CELEBRATES NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

In celebration of Earth Month, our team here at the KBHCCD spent some time volunteering at the Dallas Arboretum. As we continue to practice green initiatives, we were very happy to learn about sustainability efforts at the arboretum, and the youth educational programs that they have in place.

This week, in the Children's Garden, we engaged with visitors to teach them about:

- Alternative energy sources.
- Biodegradable containers.
- The impact of paper waste on our planet and the benefits of reusing paper!
- The importance of native plants to our ecosystem.

In addition to the "discover sustainability" initiative, the Dallas Arboretum is highly involved in supporting the "STEM program in Dallas and beyond. The Dallas Arboretum and Botanical Garden has been engaging North Texans of all ages with educational programming for nearly two decades, cultivating a connection to nature and inspiring environmental stewardship through garden-based experiences including field trips, outreach programs, afterschool lessons, and academic overnights. Courses are offered in using sustainability-based lessons to engage students in critical thinking and problem solving to help them invest in, improve upon, and learn from their campus green spaces. It helps inspire a new generation of leaders to design a sustainable future for all."
