

Contact:
Kristina Kolerich
Media Relations
206.276.6798
Kristina.Kolerich@AdlerBrinkley.com

Texas Energy Holdings' President Chad Willis to Co-Chair Event Benefiting the New York Rescue Workers Detoxification Project

Dallas, TX—September 15, 2008—Chad Willis, president and co-founder of energy investment firm Texas Energy Holdings, will co-chair an event in New York City benefiting the New York Rescue Workers Detoxification Project. The organization was founded to help 9/11 rescue workers who suffer health problems from toxic exposure following the attacks on the World Trade Center.

“I am honored to be involved with many Dallas-based nonprofit and philanthropic organizations that help and inspire young people and teen mothers, and now I am privileged to be associated with the New York Rescue Workers Detoxification Project and its program that has provided help to hundreds of heroic emergency workers suffering 9/11-related health problems,” said Chad Willis, president and co-founder of Texas Energy Holdings. “The program is committed to restoring the health of these rescue workers, and we look forward to a successful event that will further benefit the commitment of everyone involved in the New York Rescue Workers Detoxification Project.”

The event is being held September 18, 2008, at the famed DYLAN Prime restaurant in New York. For more information about the New York Rescue Workers Detoxification Project visit: www.nydetox.org

About Texas Energy Holdings

Texas Energy Holdings is a privately held energy investment firm managing more than $180 million in assets for national and international institutional and individual clients. Texas Energy Holdings has working interest ownership in more than 1,600 wells in six states, and operates 500 wells through its subsidiary Texas Energy Holdings Operations. Texas Energy Holdings and its subsidiaries are located in Dallas, Texas, with international offices in Shanghai, China. www.TX-Energy.com