

Swiss Wines of Agriloro Gains Global Vegan Certification with BeVeg

05/17/2020 (Genestrerio, Switzerland)

Agriloro, located in Switzerland is noted as one of the oldest and most important vineyards in Mendrisiotto according to 18th century documents, now has another notable claim: certified vegan. After an extensive review process of products, ingredients, and processes Agriloro officially joins the global BeVeg vegan certification network, along with many other wineries across the globe.

You may ask how is a wine not vegan? The truth is, many alcoholic beverages often contain animal products or byproducts either in the ingredients or process of making the wine. Some murky ingredients you may come across include isinglass (fish bladder), egg whites, gelatin, bones of fish, bone char, and more. In fact, the Tobacco and Trade Bureau once said there can be more than 60 ingredients that go into your alcoholic beverage. Notably, none of which is disclosed on the bottle. BeVeg vegan certification lends transparency and trust so the consumer can drink with confidence. BeVeg continues to be mentioned as the GOLD STANDARD for vegan certification in well-known news outlets like Forbes, PETA, CBS, NBC, Social Life Magazine, LiveKindly, VegWorld, VegNews, to name a few. In addition, BeVeg is used by celebrity supermodel, Christie Brinkley, and vegan icon from What The Health documentary, Kip Anderson, and is on the packaging of many iconic leading wineries of the world.

At Agriloro, there is a passion for experimentation and innovation. According to the winery, they try to use natural and respectful methods as much as possible to ensure sustainability and compassion towards the planet. This is important since own the largest number of hectares in this zone. Now, this vegan certified winery makes 28 wines of different varieties, many of which have received multiple awards, including "2010 Winemaker of the year."
