Düsseldorf based design studio launches coronavirus diary app "Coronika"

Currently the novel coronavirus is omnipresent. New infections and spreads are reported daily. Affected by the insecurity of the people and the health and economic consequences for society, the Düsseldorf-based company Kreativzirkel has developed an app with which everyone can make a small contribution to the containment of the virus: Coronika.

The Coronika app works like a kind of diary for the health of all of us. Every day users enter persons they have had contact with or places they have visited. This information is stored locally in the app for 30 days.

The data is only stored locally on the user's device, there is no transfer to the operators, so the user's data is safe. In the event of infection, users have the option of passing on the information to doctors or health authorities in order to help discover paths of infection and to provide information about persons at risk.

The app also provides practical hygiene tips and reminds you to wash your hands, for example. The app is currently available in German and English, an update with 10 additional languages will be available for download soon.

"As a company that develops solutions in a digital context on a daily basis, it is important for us to make a contribution to contain this crisis," says CEO Alexander Braden, explaining the reasons for the development of the free application.

The health innovation hub of the Federal Ministry of Health supported the digital agency during the publication of the application.

The Coronika App is available for free in the Google Play Store. A release in the Apple App Store will be coming soon. For more information, please visit: www.coronika.app
