ILFA Announces Inaugural International Legal Finance Conference in New York

Washington, DC – The International Legal Finance Association (ILFA) today announced it will host its first annual International Legal Finance Conference on Monday, October 24, 2022, at the prestigious Morgan Library in New York City.

The conference will draw together legal and finance leaders from across the world—including providers of legal finance, investors, law firms, corporate general counsels and CFOs to discuss the best practices in managing litigation and arbitration costs and risks and monetization of legal assets. A range of speakers from across the legal finance ecosystem will present on the industry’s most substantive topics such as managing in-house legal budgets, managing financial and reputational risk, the impact of global economic trends on liquidity pressures, enforcement and monetization of awards, law firm financing and portfolio funding.

“As the world’s only global trade association for commercial legal finance, we are excited to launch this industry-leading conference,” said Gary Barnett, Executive Director for ILFA. “The event will provide a forum for legal finance professionals and users of legal finance including corporate counsel to explore the role of litigation finance in today’s global marketplace as a cost and risk management tool, as well as for investors in legal assets.”

“The conference marks an exciting moment for ILFA and comes at a pivotal time for our industry,” said Neil Purslow, ILFA Chairman and Co-Founder and CIO of Therium Capital Management. “Conference attendees will have a unique opportunity to learn from leaders in the field about how it can be used as an integral part of their cash management strategy.”
