NextJob Selected as Endorsed Business Partner by Michigan Health & Hospital Association

Service Helps Hospitals Provide Reemployment and Career Development Benefits

BEND, Ore.— NextJob, a nationwide reemployment services and outplacement company, has been selected by the Michigan Health & Hospital Association (MHA) to join its Endorsed Business Partner (EBP) program to offer a win-win approach to help Michigan hospitals and their employees.

“We are looking forward to partnering with NextJob so that our member hospital and health systems have access to a national leader in outplacement and employee career development,” said MHA CEO Brian Peters. “We’re confident those selected for our EBP program can help healthcare facilities avoid unnecessary costs, recover revenue, reduce operating expenses, improve management and quality, increase productivity, develop staff resources and apply new strategies.”

MHA developed its EBP program to identify and connect its members with high quality industry-leading firms that can meet their most pressing needs.

“Fourteen years ago, we made it our mission to develop win-win reemployment solutions” said John Courtney, NextJob CEO. “In this case, the claiming employee lands a great job faster and the employer reduces the length of their unemployment claims.”

NextJob works with small and large hospitals, Fortune 500 companies and nonprofit associations, often helping laid off employees land jobs twice as fast. The service is designed not only to reduce employers’ unemployment insurance costs, but also to preserve community and employee goodwill.

For employers not making layoffs, NextJob offers employee career development coaching to assess, train and equip emerging leaders and staff seeking growth opportunities.

Courtney noted that: “In the job current market, forward-thinking employee benefits appear to be as important as ever in recruiting and retaining great talent. After the COVID-19-driven layoffs our nation experienced, unemployment in particular, is on employee’s minds.”

Using an evidence-based approach through proactive virtual coaching, webinars and a proprietary online job search system, NextJob has been on the leading edge of rethinking reemployment. The firm’s award-winning reemployment approach has been profiled in the Wall Street Journal, Detroit Free Press and the Chicago Tribune.

NextJob's pricing for MHA Members is nicely below the industry average reflecting NextJob's mission to make outplacement and career development coaching affordable services for all levels of employees.
