

Landscape of Terms: Expanding a Lexicon

Care

"Care is a species activity that includes everything that we do to maintain, continue, and repair our world so that we can live in it as well as possible. That world includes our bodies, ourselves, and our environment, all of which we seek to interweave in a complex, life-sustaining web."

Bernice Fisher, and Joan Tronto, "Toward a Feminist Theory of Care" (1990).

Caring

"Caring [...] generates possibilities for other ways of relating and living, it connects things that are not supposed to reach across the bifurcation of consciousness, and transforms the ethic-political and affective perceptions of things by the way we represent them."

Maria Puig de la Bellacasa, "Matters of Care in Technoscience: Assembling Neglected Things" (2011).

Hospitality

"The cornerstone for my thoughts about hospitality, like many others, comes from Derrida. Derrida proposed that the only way for the West to maintain its moral and civil standing was to perform what he called unconditional hospitality. He drew his understanding of unconditional hospitality from Islam and this relationship of respect between the host and guest. What is radically problematic about this is that Derrida does not even consider the possibility for the positions of host and guest to change. The hosts were the hosts, and the guests were the guests. The only ones who can perform unconditional hospitality, then, are eternal hosts, and the only ones who can receive it are eternal guests. This is a terribly colonial way of thinking. [...] Hospitality is still a question of survival, yet it cannot be guaranteed just by being a good guest or a good host. Hospitality is a daily practice; it extends well beyond the third day. We need to decolonize our understanding of hospitality and ensure everyone has the right to host."

Sandi Hilal, "The Right to Host" (2019).

Mutual Aid

"Mutual aid isn't charity: it's a form of organizing where people get to create new systems of care and generosity so we can survive."

Dean Spade, Mutual Aid: "Building Solidarity During This Crisis (and the next)" (2020).

Joyful Administration

"How can we bridge the separation of one kind of work(er) – administrative, bureaucratic – from another – the creative or the academic? It is fundamental to understand these as two interconnected parts of every cultural endeavour. 'Joyful administration' is a term I coined when confronted with the huge amount of administrative work behind my projects. It was an attempt to practice with joy the invisible side of cultural work and to propose that what defines the practice are these daily acts! To challenge and disrupt bureaucratic traps with radical imagination."

Rosario Talevi, "Dimensions of Care" (2021).

Support Structure

"Everything starts from this intuition: that what I define as support structures can release potential, and that support is not to be reduced to a reactive, symptomatic, and redeeming gesture, but that through its uttering we may be able to hear the unspoken, unsatisfied, the late and the latent, the in-process, the pre-thought, the not-yet-manifest, the undeveloped, the unrecognized, the delayed, the unanswered, the unavailable, the not-deliverable, the discarded, the overlooked, the neglected, the hidden, the forgotten, the unnamed, the un-paid, the missing, the longing, the invisible, the unseen, the behind-the-scene, the disappeared, the concealed, the unwanted, the dormant."

Céline Condorelli, "Support Structures" (2009).

Instrumentalising

"To me the investigative and explorative qualities of the arts should serve the purpose of collectively taking responsibility for the places where we live. Art should ask the question: how can cities engage in critical public issues, and what does it take to become an active citizen? How can places become public again, as platforms for meeting, discussion and conflict? As an artist I also inquire how I can work with my skills within complex urban environments. In all my work I question how I can be an instrument that gives us the ability to influence our daily environment. I like being an instrument, despite the discussions in which social art is understood as instrumentalised by governments and other powers. I like being an instrument but one that works on self-organization, collective ownership, and new forms of sociability."

Jeanne van Heeswijk, "The Artist has to decide whom to serve" (2014).

This "landscape of terms" is composed of quotes, ideas and concepts that Soft Agency have encountered during our recent years of practice. Its inclusion in the collection of articles we have produced for this journal in response to the theme "landscapes of care" stemmed from a desire to expand the terminology around—and beyond—the word "care". The term has gained new currency in recent years, but with this increased traction comes the danger that its meanings and potency become diluted and flattened. The expansion of this lexicon constitutes both a provocation and a demand that the complex and multiple dimensions of care be acknowledged, in order to further and better employ manifold practices of care.

Planetary

"Planetary has been altogether misunderstood; as something like community, thinking of the world's resources, or yet, at the extreme, sustainability. Let me ask the reader to work out the difference, to see planetary as the source of a double bind that will not bind."

Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, "Imperatives to Re-imagine the Planet" (1990).

Relationality

"If capitalism is a set of social relationships based on exploitation, regularisation, alienation and commodification, then the antidote to capitalist rationalisation is a new relationality, an empathetic, sensual, and rational way of relating that is deeply cooperative, pleasurable, and meaningful."

Chaia Heller, "Ecology of Everyday Life, Rethinking the Desire for Nature" (1999).

Situated Knowledge

"Situated knowledges are about communities, not about isolated individuals. The only way to find a larger vision is to be somewhere in particular. The science question in feminism is about objectivity as positioned rationality. Its images are not the products of escape and transcendence of limits (the view from above) but the joining of partial views and halting voices into a collective subject position that promises a vision of the means of ongoing finite embodiment, of living within limits and contradictions of views from somewhere."

Donna Haraway, "Situated Knowledges: The Science Question in Feminism and the Privilege of Partial Perspective" (1988).

Softness

"If we were to ask what methodologies of softness are, a core underlying element would be the notion of attentive tending. It is difficult to precisely pin down how this actually manifests and it is the 'work' that will likely evolve and involve us for many more years, but it is a mix of intentional acts of movement and manoeuvre that purposefully aim to reverse, alleviate and soften normative framings while also scaffolding and supporting transitions of change. [...] Softness is our tactical and spatially oriented response to a call for care, attentiveness, responsiveness and responsibility."

Teresa Dillon, "Methodologies of Softness" (2021).

Landscape of Terms: Expanding a Lexicon

Care

"Care is a species activity that includes everything that we do to maintain, continue, and repair our world so that we can live in it as well as possible. That world includes our bodies, ourselves, and our environment, all of which we seek to interweave in a complex, life-sustaining web."

Bernice Fisher, and Joan Tronto, "Toward a Feminist Theory of Care" (1990).

Caring

"Caring [...] generates possibilities for other ways of relating and living, it connects things that are not supposed to reach across the bifurcation of consciousness, and transforms the ethic-political and affective perceptions of things by the way we represent them."

Maria Puig de la Bellacasa, "Matters of Care in Technoscience: Assembling Neglected Things" (2011).

Hospitality

"The cornerstone for my thoughts about hospitality, like many others, comes from Derrida. Derrida proposed that the only way for the West to maintain its moral and civil standing was to perform what he called unconditional hospitality. He drew his understanding of unconditional hospitality from Islam and this relationship of respect between the host and guest. What is radically problematic about this is that Derrida does not even consider the possibility for the positions of host and guest to change. The hosts were the hosts, and the guests were the guests. The only ones who can perform unconditional hospitality, then, are eternal hosts, and the only ones who can receive it are eternal guests. This is a terribly colonial way of thinking. [...] Hospitality is still a question of survival, yet it cannot be guaranteed just by being a good guest or a good host. Hospitality is a daily practice; it extends well beyond the third day. We need to decolonize our understanding of hospitality and ensure everyone has the right to host."

Sandi Hilal, "The Right to Host" (2019).

Mutual Aid

"Mutual aid isn't charity: it's a form of organizing where people get to create new systems of care and generosity so we can survive."

Dean Spade, Mutual Aid: "Building Solidarity During This Crisis (and the next)" (2020).

Joyful Administration

"How can we bridge the separation of one kind of work(er) – administrative, bureaucratic – from another – the creative or the academic? It is fundamental to understand these as two interconnected parts of every cultural endeavour. 'Joyful administration' is a term I coined when confronted with the huge amount of administrative work behind my projects. It was an attempt to practice with joy the invisible side of cultural work and to propose that what defines the practice are these daily acts! To challenge and disrupt bureaucratic traps with radical imagination."

Rosario Talevi, "Dimensions of Care" (2021).

Support Structure

"Everything starts from this intuition: that what I define as support structures can release potential, and that support is not to be reduced to a reactive, symptomatic, and redeeming gesture, but that through its uttering we may be able to hear the unspoken, unsatisfied, the late and the latent, the in-process, the pre-thought, the not-yet-manifest, the undeveloped, the unrecognized, the delayed, the unanswered, the unavailable, the not-deliverable, the discarded, the overlooked, the neglected, the hidden, the forgotten, the unnamed, the un-paid, the missing, the longing, the invisible, the unseen, the behind-the-scene, the disappeared, the concealed, the unwanted, the dormant."

Céline Condorelli, "Support Structures" (2009).

Instrumentalising

"To me the investigative and explorative qualities of the arts should serve the purpose of collectively taking responsibility for the places where we live. Art should ask the question: how can cities engage in critical public issues, and what does it take to become an active citizen? How can places become public again, as platforms for meeting, discussion and conflict? As an artist I also inquire how I can work with my skills within complex urban environments. In all my work I question how I can be an instrument that gives us the ability to influence our daily environment. I like being an instrument, despite the discussions in which social art is understood as instrumentalised by governments and other powers. I like being an instrument but one that works on self-organization, collective ownership, and new forms of sociability."

Jeanne van Heeswijk, "The Artist has to decide whom to serve" (2014).

This "landscape of terms" is composed of quotes, ideas and concepts that Soft Agency have encountered during our recent years of practice. Its inclusion in the collection of articles we have produced for this journal in response to the theme "landscapes of care" stemmed from a desire to expand the terminology around—and beyond—the word "care". The term has gained new currency in recent years, but with this increased traction comes the danger that its meanings and potency become diluted and flattened. The expansion of this lexicon constitutes both a provocation and a demand that the complex and multiple dimensions of care be acknowledged, in order to further and better employ manifold practices of care.

Planetary

"Planetary has been altogether misunderstood; as something like community, thinking of the world's resources, or yet, at the extreme, sustainability. Let me ask the reader to work out the difference, to see planetary as the source of a double bind that will not bind."

Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, "Imperatives to Re-imagine the Planet" (1990).

Relationality

"If capitalism is a set of social relationships based on exploitation, regularisation, alienation and commodification, then the antidote to capitalist rationalisation is a new relationality, an empathetic, sensual, and rational way of relating that is deeply cooperative, pleasurable, and meaningful."

Chaia Heller, "Ecology of Everyday Life, Rethinking the Desire for Nature" (1999).

Situated Knowledge

"Situated knowledges are about communities, not about isolated individuals. The only way to find a larger vision is to be somewhere in particular. The science question in feminism is about objectivity as positioned rationality. Its images are not the products of escape and transcendence of limits (the view from above) but the joining of partial views and halting voices into a collective subject position that promises a vision of the means of ongoing finite embodiment, of living within limits and contradictions of views from somewhere."

Donna Haraway, "Situated Knowledges: The Science Question in Feminism and the Privilege of Partial Perspective" (1988).

Softness

"If we were to ask what methodologies of softness are, a core underlying element would be the notion of attentive tending. It is difficult to precisely pin down how this actually manifests and it is the 'work' that will likely evolve and involve us for many more years, but it is a mix of intentional acts of movement and manoeuvre that purposefully aim to reverse, alleviate and soften normative framings while also scaffolding and supporting transitions of change. [...] Softness is our tactical and spatially oriented response to a call for care, attentiveness, responsiveness and responsibility."

Teresa Dillon, "Methodologies of Softness" (2021).

Landscape of Terms: Expanding a Lexicon

Care

"Care is a species activity that includes everything that we do to maintain, continue, and repair our world so that we can live in it as well as possible. That world includes our bodies, ourselves, and our environment, all of which we seek to interweave in a complex, life-sustaining web."

Bernice Fisher, and Joan Tronto, "Toward a Feminist Theory of Care" (1990).

Caring

"Caring [...] generates possibilities for other ways of relating and living, it connects things that are not supposed to reach across the bifurcation of consciousness, and transforms the ethic-political and affective perceptions of things by the way we represent them."

Maria Puig de la Bellacasa, "Matters of Care in Technoscience: Assembling Neglected Things" (2011).

Hospitality

"The cornerstone for my thoughts about hospitality, like many others, comes from Derrida. Derrida proposed that the only way for the West to maintain its moral and civil standing was to perform what he called unconditional hospitality. He drew his understanding of unconditional hospitality from Islam and this relationship of respect between the host and guest. What is radically problematic about this is that Derrida does not even consider the possibility for the positions of host and guest to change. The hosts were the hosts, and the guests were the guests. The only ones who can perform unconditional hospitality, then, are eternal hosts, and the only ones who can receive it are eternal guests. This is a terribly colonial way of thinking. [...] Hospitality is still a question of survival, yet it cannot be guaranteed just by being a good guest or a good host. Hospitality is a daily practice; it extends well beyond the third day. We need to decolonize our understanding of hospitality and ensure everyone has the right to host."

Sandi Hilal, "The Right to Host" (2019).

Mutual Aid

"Mutual aid isn't charity: it's a form of organizing where people get to create new systems of care and generosity so we can survive."

Dean Spade, Mutual Aid: "Building Solidarity During This Crisis (and the next)" (2020).

Joyful Administration

"How can we bridge the separation of one kind of work(er) – administrative, bureaucratic – from another – the creative or the academic? It is fundamental to understand these as two interconnected parts of every cultural endeavour. 'Joyful administration' is a term I coined when confronted with the huge amount of administrative work behind my projects. It was an attempt to practice with joy the invisible side of cultural work and to propose that what defines the practice are these daily acts! To challenge and disrupt bureaucratic traps with radical imagination."

Rosario Talevi, "Dimensions of Care" (2021).

Support Structure

"Everything starts from this intuition: that what I define as support structures can release potential, and that support is not to be reduced to a reactive, symptomatic, and redeeming gesture, but that through its uttering we may be able to hear the unspoken, unsatisfied, the late and the latent, the in-process, the pre-thought, the not-yet-manifest, the undeveloped, the unrecognized, the delayed, the unanswered, the unavailable, the not-deliverable, the discarded, the overlooked, the neglected, the hidden, the forgotten, the unnamed, the un-paid, the missing, the longing, the invisible, the unseen, the behind-the-scene, the disappeared, the concealed, the unwanted, the dormant."

Céline Condorelli, "Support Structures" (2009).

Instrumentalising

"To me the investigative and explorative qualities of the arts should serve the purpose of collectively taking responsibility for the places where we live. Art should ask the question: how can cities engage in critical public issues, and what does it take to become an active citizen? How can places become public again, as platforms for meeting, discussion and conflict? As an artist I also inquire how I can work with my skills within complex urban environments. In all my work I question how I can be an instrument that gives us the ability to influence our daily environment. I like being an instrument, despite the discussions in which social art is understood as instrumentalised by governments and other powers. I like being an instrument but one that works on self-organization, collective ownership, and new forms of sociability."

Jeanne van Heeswijk, "The Artist has to decide whom to serve" (2014).

This "landscape of terms" is composed of quotes, ideas and concepts that Soft Agency have encountered during our recent years of practice. Its inclusion in the collection of articles we have produced for this journal in response to the theme "landscapes of care" stemmed from a desire to expand the terminology around—and beyond—the word "care". The term has gained new currency in recent years, but with this increased traction comes the danger that its meanings and potency become diluted and flattened. The expansion of this lexicon constitutes both a provocation and a demand that the complex and multiple dimensions of care be acknowledged, in order to further and better employ manifold practices of care.

Planetary

"Planetary has been altogether misunderstood; as something like community, thinking of the world's resources, or yet, at the extreme, sustainability. Let me ask the reader to work out the difference, to see planetary as the source of a double bind that will not bind."

Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, "Imperatives to Re-imagine the Planet" (1990).

Relationality

"If capitalism is a set of social relationships based on exploitation, regularisation, alienation and commodification, then the antidote to capitalist rationalisation is a new relationality, an empathetic, sensual, and rational way of relating that is deeply cooperative, pleasurable, and meaningful."

Chaia Heller, "Ecology of Everyday Life, Rethinking the Desire for Nature" (1999).

Situated Knowledge

"Situated knowledges are about communities, not about isolated individuals. The only way to find a larger vision is to be somewhere in particular. The science question in feminism is about objectivity as positioned rationality. Its images are not the products of escape and transcendence of limits (the view from above) but the joining of partial views and halting voices into a collective subject position that promises a vision of the means of ongoing finite embodiment, of living within limits and contradictions of views from somewhere."

Donna Haraway, "Situated Knowledges: The Science Question in Feminism and the Privilege of Partial Perspective" (1988).

Softness

"If we were to ask what methodologies of softness are, a core underlying element would be the notion of attentive tending. It is difficult to precisely pin down how this actually manifests and it is the 'work' that will likely evolve and involve us for many more years, but it is a mix of intentional acts of movement and manoeuvre that purposefully aim to reverse, alleviate and soften normative framings while also scaffolding and supporting transitions of change. [...] Softness is our tactical and spatially oriented response to a call for care, attentiveness, responsiveness and responsibility."

Teresa Dillon, "Methodologies of Softness" (2021).