CAREER

TACTICAL ANALYSIS

Individual technique

Breaking-line pass

Polyvalence

He is a skillful player. He has a great ball control and tempo of play. Once he receives it, he positions his body well to keep the ball protected. He is useful for the combination play, outstanding for on the ground associations. His good short pass allows him to play dynamically and look for different heights to play.

Due to his technical and individual technique, his breaking-line pass is something he makes great. He tries to make it both at building up to find out free men and putting teammates in play in front of the goal in the last third. He understands well his teammates' movements.

He has played many positions in youth categories, such as offensive midfielder, winger, centre midfielder, box to box and forward. It's all because of this capacity of adapting to different systems and game models, and also to his good technical skills. Nowadays, he play the most as a centre midfielder and as a box to box, in order to step up the box.

TACTICAL ANALYSIS

Long passes

He has a good long pass. He makes both frontal and lateral crosses. When he plays centralized, he looks for opening up and make a big switch to a receiver with enough time and space. He can put a teammate in a goal chance by one of his switches of play.

Defensive support

Perrone understands his role, both when pressing up rival's centre midfielders who are trying to build up from the back and when closing passing lanes. He knows how to position himself for second balls, being a key player to recover the ball and manage the possession.

Leadership

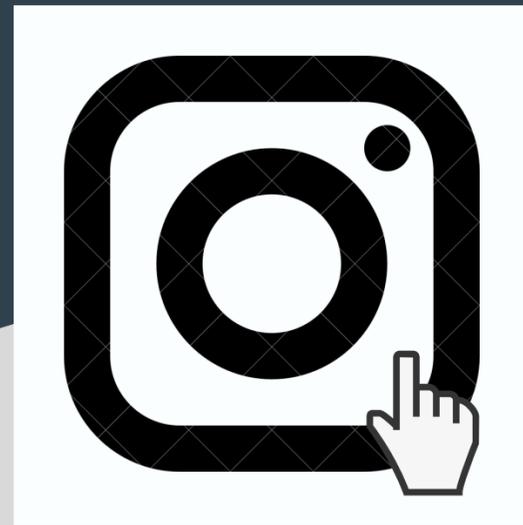

Since he was child he has been a leader. He is the 2003 category's captain of Vélez Sarsfield, same role he has accomplished for Argentina National Team. He has the tempo of play. Even though being so young, he has already had practices with the first team.
