	We hike eastwards from Valldemossa. After some minutes, it goes uphill. On the Camí de s'Arxiduc - the "Archduke's bridle path", high above the sea, we have a spectacular view of the whole island.
	Thanks to the network of paths laid out by the Austrian Archduke Ludwig Salvator in the 19th century with vantage spots in exactly the right places, Valldemossa offers several tour options through the charming mountainous region. The tour shows us picturesque views of the west and north coast. Afterwards we have some free time to stroll through the small streets of the village of Valldemossa.

	We can only imagine what difficulties people had to face in earlier centuries in these areas to ensure their survival, because here one thing predominates above all: loneliness.

	Surrounded by mountains, it is easy to forget that we are on an island. The pilgrimage site of Lluc seems only a stone's throw away from the Coll de Sa Batalla.
