AIDS Researcher Holtgrave Assumes Dean’s Post at SPH

Prominent AIDS researcher David R. Holtgrave joined the University at Albany March 1 as dean of the School of Public Health (SPH). He replaces former dean Philip C. Nasca, who retired in 2017.

Holtgrave has been awarded a tenured faculty position as professor of health policy and behavior at SPH. He was also named a SUNY Empire Innovation Professor.

Holtgrave came to UAlbany from Johns Hopkins University’s Bloomberg School of Public Health, where he served as endowed professor and founding chair of the Department of Health, Behavior and Society. Previously, he led the HIV/AIDS research support division at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

SUNY Trustees Name Pridemore, Welsh Distinguished Professors

The State University of New York Board of Trustees has designated School of Criminal Justice (SCJ) Dean William Alex Pridemore and School of Public Health (SPH) Empire Innovations Professor Joelle Welsh SUNY Distinguished Professors.

Pridemore, who earned his Ph.D. from UAlbany in 2000, has headed SCJ since 2015. He is internationally recognized for his research on the impact of social structure on homicide and suicide rates, the role of alcohol in violence and mortality, and the impact of the Soviet Union’s collapse on violence and health in Russia.

Welsh, a professor in the Department of Environmental Health Sciences, is a pioneer in studying the role of Vitamin D in breast-cancer prevention and therapy. Based at the Cancer Research Center on the Health Sciences Campus, she joined the University at Albany faculty in 2008.

The Distinguished Professor ranking is conferred upon individuals who have achieved prominence and distinguished reputations within their chosen fields. Their work also elevates the standards of scholarship both within and beyond their disciplines.

Five-Year NIH Grant Supports Halvorsen’s Work

A $1.9 million National Institutes of Health grant has been awarded to RNA Institute senior research scientist Ken Halvorsen. The Outstanding Investigator Award will support the work of the Halvorsen Lab in developing novel, user-centric technologies for the detection and single-molecule analysis of ribonucleic acid (RNA) — a vital class of molecules essential for all known forms of life.

SCJ Observes Its 50TH Anniversary

In 2018, the School of Criminal Justice marks its 50th anniversary with a series of special events both scholarly and social. The yearlong celebration will culminate with the anniversary gala in October.

For updates about events related to this important milestone, please visit the Dean’s News page at www.albany.edu/scj/files/Sep_2017.pdf and the school’s website, www.albany.edu/scj/.
Frank Is Nobel Laureate

Joachim Frank, a Distinguished Professor in the University at Albany School of Public Health’s Department of Biomedical Sciences from 1985 until 2008, is one of three recipients of the 2017 Nobel Prize in Chemistry. The award honored Frank and his colleagues, Jacques Dubochet of Switzerland and Richard Henderson of the United Kingdom, for their work in developing cryo-electron microscopy, which both simplifies and improves the imaging of biomolecules. A professor at Columbia University since 2008, Frank maintains an affiliation with the RNA Institute at UAlbany.

NYSWI Marks Two Special Anniversaries

In 2018, the New York State Writers Institute celebrates two landmark occasions: the 35th anniversary of its creation and the 90th birthday of its founder, Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist and longtime UAlbany faculty member William Kennedy.

Through early May, special events planned include:

MARCH 27: A joint appearance by best-selling mystery author Archer Mayor and UAlbany Professor of Chemistry Rabi Musah

APRIL 17: A talk, presentation, and question-and-answer session with acclaimed novelists Sara Novic and Peter Golden

APRIL 19: A program featuring award-winning novelist Salman Rushdie (co-sponsored by the UAlbany Speaker Series)

APRIL 20: A visit from screenwriter, television producer, comic-book author, and novelist Marc Guggenheim, B.A. ’92

APRIL 24: Women and Power in America, a program moderated by broadcast journalist Cokie Roberts and featuring panelists Danielle Belton, editor-in-chief of the African-American news and culture site The Root; former presidential candidate Jill Stein; and Albany Mayor Kathy Sheehan

APRIL 30: The 22nd annual Burian Lecture, which also includes a craft talk by Eugene Lee, legendary set designer for Wicked and “Saturday Night Live”

MAY 1: A craft talk, presentation, and Q&A with prize-winning poet and former San Diego gang member David Tomas Martinez

MAY 4: “This Is Your Life, William Kennedy,” a video tribute and evening reverie honoring the Writers Institute founder

Ellen Lends a Helping Hand

With help from talk-show host Ellen DeGeneres, three UAlbany students are fulfilling their college dreams on four-year scholarships.

As part of DeGeneres’ “Summit” documentary series, and in conjunction with Walmart, all 42 members of the Class of 2017 at Summit Academy Charter School in Brooklyn, N.Y., received full scholarships to the SUNY schools of their choice. Walmart also provided each student an additional $10,000 for college-related expenses.

Former Summit classmates Nyasha Biggs, Sharinel Nunez, and Melick Lubin are now freshmen at UAlbany. They and three other Summit graduates shared their impressions of their first months at school on “Ellen” last fall.

Ellen DeGeneres meets Sharinel Nunez, Nyasha Biggs, and Melick Lubin, the three UAlbany freshman recipients of the “Ellen” scholarship.
Where Are They Now?
By Carol Olechowski

Back to Her Roots • Lisa Lillien, B.A.’87

Fans of “Hungry Girl” – diet-and-lifestyle expert Lisa Lillien – “have been asking for a magazine for years.” So “when the opportunity presented itself, I jumped all over it!” exclaims the self-described “guru of guilt-free eating.”

Published by Meredith, the Spring 2018 Hungry Girl rolled off the presses in mid-January. “For now, two test issues are planned. If the magazine is successful, it could become a quarterly,” notes Lillien, adding that the publication’s initial circulation is 225,000.

According to its editor-in-chief, each issue will feature approximately 100 pages packed with “a lot of recipes, lifestyle content, hacks – even info for pet owners, with recipes for dogs!”

Lillien is excited about helming Hungry Girl; “my roots are in magazines,” she observes. After earning a degree in communications and business administration from the University at Albany, Lillien returned home to Long Island to edit the “teen fanzine” Tutti Frutti. She later held executive positions at Nickelodeon, TV Land, and Warner Bros. before launching Hungry Girl in 2004.

The brand began as a free email, titled “Tips and Tricks … for Hungry Chicks” and sent daily to fewer than 100 subscribers. In each message, Lillien, who’d gone “up and down about 15 pounds” in her teens and 20s, dispensed common-sense advice about diet and fitness; offered recipes for tasty, nutritionally balanced meals and snacks; and suggested substitutions for high-calorie, high-fat packaged foods.

Soon, the “foodologist” branched out into other media. She wrote a column for the New York Daily News and created weekly content for Weight Watchers.com, Redbook, and Yahoo! Lillien’s books became fixtures on the New York Times best-seller list. She reached television viewers through “Hungry Girl,” which aired on both Food Network and the Cooking Channel, and through guest shots on “The Dr. Oz Show.”

Based in Los Angeles, Lillien continues to travel for TV and personal appearances. Her 12th book, the Amazon No.-1 Best Seller Hungry Girl Clean & Hungry OBSESSED! All-Natural Recipes for the Foods You Can’t Live Without, was published last September. And the email that launched the Hungry Girl brand 14 years ago still goes out each day – to more than 1 million readers.

Hungry Girl is sold at supermarkets, bookstores, newsstands – “and readers can order it online,” Lillien says. “It will also be available digitally.”

The second issue will publish in April.
For Dan Hart, the sky’s the limit.

As Virgin Orbit president and CEO, Hart oversees a team of more than 400 dedicated to “building a launch system to carry small satellites (300 to 500 kilograms) to orbit. Our first launch to orbit will be this year, so we are under full steam in our Long Beach [Calif.] headquarters and at our test range in the Mojave Air and Space Port.”

Hart notes: “The satellite industry is going through a transformation much like consumer electronics has over the years. Capabilities that once were only possible on satellites the sizes of SUVs can now be accomplished by satellites the sizes of washing machines, microwave ovens … and even toasters.” These new resources, he adds, are “enabled by the density of electronics, advances in electric propulsion, laser communications, and phased-array antennas, among other things.”

Over the past few years, “a large array of start-up companies has formed, aiming to provide communications, imaging, data storage, and a host of other capabilities using fleets of small satellites,” explains Hart. That’s where he and Virgin Orbit enter the picture.

“Unlike most launch systems, we are air-launched. Our 747, Cosmic Girl, carries our rocket out to sea, up to approximately 35,000 feet, and drops it. The rocket engine ignites, and the satellite goes to orbit.”

Hart says that 2018 promises to be “a very busy year for us.” His goal is to “lead this team to orbit and ramp up production of more than 24 rockets a year, then expand the company into other aspects of space transportation.

“Working with Richard Branson and the Virgin Team has been very exciting. They are fast moving – a true entrepreneurial group under a unified purpose to change business for good. It’s an inspiring place to be.”

Hart was recruited to Virgin Orbit in 2016. “I had been running Boeing’s Government Satellite Business and completing a number of satellite launches – GPS, NASA TDRS, X-37, etc. – when I received a call about a new space company that was looking for a CEO. One thing came to another, and here I am,” he recalls.

Currently, “Virgin Orbit is more focused on improving life on earth by enabling beneficial capabilities in space that serve earth and humanity,” adds Hart, who majored in physics at UAlbany and once aspired to a career as an astronaut. “That said, we’ll provide supplies to people in space or partner with Virgin Galactic and propel people into outer space.”

Given the opportunity, would Hart go into space?

“If there’s something I could contribute, something that needed doing, I’d be there in a heartbeat,” he responds.
A Life-Changing Gift

With a “perfect” high-school grade-point average of 1.0 and a few minor run-ins with the law as a teen, Alan Lizotte wasn’t certain what his future held. He served in the U.S. Navy for four years during the Vietnam War, then took remedial courses at a Massachusetts community college. Things began looking up when a professor there arranged an interview for him at Brown University. Lizotte received “a free ride” to the Ivy League school, where he studied sociology, developed an interest in criminal justice, and graduated with honors. The experience “changed my life,” says Lizotte, who completed master’s and doctoral studies at the University of Illinois.

Now, Lizotte and his wife, Lisa Jackson, are making a planned gift that promises to change the lives of graduate students at the University at Albany’s School of Criminal Justice. It will also preserve and enhance the school’s reputation for excellence.

Lizotte, who served as dean from 2010 to 2015, touts the school’s Albany Model, replicated by other academic institutions in the field; its interdisciplinary programs; and the 300-plus Ph.D.s educated there since its founding in 1968.

Since arriving at UAlbany in 1985, Lizotte has mentored “at least” 30 of those doctoral students. He’s also been involved with the ground-breaking Rochester [N.Y.] Youth Development Study (RYDS), a multi-generational study that explores the causes and consequences of delinquency and drug abuse in an urban sample of teens and young adults.

“The school has been good to me, and good for me,” notes Lizotte. So when he and Jackson, former news director at WRGB, the CBS affiliate in Albany, began discussing their wills, “we wondered what we could do for the University and the school, and how we could encourage others to make an impact.”

As dean, Lizotte had accompanied University at Albany development officer Michael Boots on visits to prospects. “I wasn’t embarrassed to ask for money,” he says, adding that he “took a couple of development courses” to enhance his fundraising skills.

In fact, Lizotte was so persuasive at presenting the school’s case that he and Jackson have earmarked their planned gift for graduate-student research. “I’m at the age now where I have to withdraw money from an IRA every year,” explains Lizotte, 70. The funding will go into a trust to be left to the University.

The couple’s pledge was timed to coincide with the midway point of the school’s capital campaign – “putting it over the top” – and with the start of SCJ’s 50th anniversary. Events planned for the celebration “will bring alumni back” while assisting Lizotte’s successor, alumnus and Dean William Alex Pridemore, Ph.D.’00, to raise money for the school.
Adell Y. Smith | Helping Others to “Dream Bigger”

Adell Y. Smith often thinks about where life might have taken her had she “dreamed bigger” as a teenager. To help others “dream bigger,” she’s established an endowment at UAlbany’s School of Public Health (SPH).

Raised on a dairy farm in New York’s Hudson Valley, Smith graduated from high school in 1963, then attended Mildred Elley Secretarial School in Albany. She subsequently held high-level executive-secretarial positions at Conrail, New York State United Teachers, First Albany Corporation, Infosearch, and State Bank of Albany, as well as at the University at Albany, where she worked for about a year as assistant to O. William Perlmutter, then dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. In 1988, she accepted a position with the Healthcare Association of New York State (HANYS), where she is now an executive assistant.

“I’ve always wondered where I might have gone [professionally] if I had gotten additional education,” Smith says, adding that when she visits friends at hospitals now, “I ask the nurses about their career aspirations.” Often, they respond by citing other financial obligations – child care, the need for a new car – that take precedence over setting aside money for their own schooling.

Last year, inspired by the appointment of M. Beatrice Grause, R.N., J.D., as the first female HANYS president in the association’s 90-year history, Smith pondered aloud, “What if there was an African-American version of Bea?” The notion, she recalls, “took on a life I never expected” as her colleagues cheered her idea of starting a scholarship endowment to support her first preference: African-American graduate students seeking to prepare for careers as leaders in healthcare policy, management, and administration. Grause herself told Smith, “I want in!” and HANYS made a matching donation.

Thus was born The Adell Y. Smith HANYS Healthcare Leadership Scholarship at SPH. Smith is eager to promote diversity within healthcare leadership, and she views the endowment as a great opportunity to impact the community positively. “I really feel blessed,” she says. “I think God had a plan for me. It all fell into place.”

Out and About

By Christine A. Doyle, M.B.A. ’04

UAlbany’s SEFCU Arena was transformed into an elegant farmhouse-inspired wonderland last Oct. 26 for the 38th Annual Citizen Laureate Awards Dinner.

More than 400 guests gathered to celebrate student scholarship, as well as the evening’s honorees, all of whom shared very personal and meaningful stories about the paths that guided them to their current lives and careers.

Pictured, left to right, are University at Albany Foundation President and master of ceremonies George R. Hearst III; The Hon. Gerald D. Jennings ’76 (Community Laureate); Rev. Kenneth J. Mention the name “Intel” and chances are what first comes to mind is “chipmaker.” But that’s changing fast, and the person facilitating the swift transformation of the company’s image is Steven Fund, who was named senior vice president and chief marketing officer at Intel in 2014.

By Claudia Ricci, Ph.D. ’96
Fund has been something of a marketing wizard at the computer company, and today, the sky’s the limit, literally, as Intel has become synonymous with spectacular displays of drone technology. Maybe you saw the splashy light show behind Lady Gaga’s halftime performance at the 2016 Super Bowl. Three hundred of Intel’s “Shooting Star” drones were choreographed to form a mammoth American flag floating in the air.

More recently, 300 of the company’s drones helped celebrate the launch of “Wonder Woman” by creating her insignia – along with other images from the movie – in lights over the city of Los Angeles.

Drone spectacles – which promise to make fireworks obsolete – aren’t the only tool in Fund’s brand-boosting arsenal. Under his direction, Intel has developed ad campaigns that rely on celebrities and are aimed at making Intel synonymous with youth, music, sports, and entertainment. The company’s impressive roster of celebrities includes Serena Williams, Jim Parsons, Michael Phelps, Tom Brady, and Lebron James.

Using a high-visibility spokesperson puts the company squarely in the public eye, and keeps it there, helping to build the brand. “Celebrities break through the clutter,” Fund says. “When people see Jim Parsons, they immediately think of Parsons in connection to Intel.”

The ultimate goal of all of this refreshing new marketing – accomplished, of course, by impressive technological advances by Intel – is to flip the notion that Intel is just a chipmaker.

“We’re trying to communicate that we’re no longer just a PC-computing company,” Fund explains. “We want people to connect Intel to any ‘smart’ or cloud-networked technology. Most people don’t know this, but literally, the world runs on Intel.”

A native of New York City, Fund majored in business at the University at Albany with a management information systems concentration. (MIS teaches students how to use information to improve a company’s operations.) “I started out with a technical background. It gave me a good foundation for the role I have today at Intel,” notes Fund.

He got his first job – as a technical-support specialist at ABC Television Network – through UAlbany’s placement office. In that position, he helped the news division use PC-based systems to track expenses, equipment, and other operations.

After leaving ABC, Fund earned a master’s in business at New York University, focusing on strategic and quantitative analysis. He was hired out of NYU by the highly regarded management-consulting firm McKinsey & Co., where he was exposed to marketing. “I really liked it. It combined strategy, creativity, and analytics.”

Fund also was keenly talented. Before landing at Intel, he held a series of marketing and brand-management jobs at some of the world’s most prestigious companies, including PepsiCo, Procter & Gamble, and Staples.

In the three years since Fund joined Intel, the company has shown dramatic improvement in several key areas, including:

- sales, which were $55.9 billion in 2014. Today, full-year sales total close to $62 billion.
- the total market value of the company, which was $128 billion three years ago. That figure exceeds $200 billion today.

Fund, who supervises 500 employees directly and another 200 worldwide, has won numerous awards and accolades for his work. Each year, Ad Age, a marketing and advertising journal, names an “A list” of top-notch performers in marketing. Intel made the list in 2016.

Other recognition includes the Global Marketer of the Year Award from PRWeek, an Adweek Brand Genius Award, and inclusion on Forbes’ “50 Most Influential CMOs in the World” list.

What advice does Fund have for UAlbany students?

“I think technology is the most exciting field today,” he observes. But the bottom line is to follow your instincts: “Explore a range of subjects and then concentrate on what you’re most passionate about.”

Adds Fund: “I’ve built on my experience at SUNY. It helped me to get where I wanted to go. I equate my career to building a house. Albany was the foundation. The walls were Procter & Gamble, PepsiCo, and Staples. And now, Intel is the roof!”
UNIVERSITY AT ALBANY PRESIDENT HAVIDÁN RODRÍGUEZ

LEADING by Example
Relocating from Texas to New York was a major move. Why did you want to become president of UAlbany?

I was drawn to the academic and research excellence here, as well as [to] the commitment to diversity and inclusion. During the interview process, I learned more about goals that UAlbany wanted to pursue, and I saw that they fit well with my background, and with what I could contribute to the growth and development of the institution.

Tell me about the Listening and Learning Tour that you have undertaken at the University.

I have been through all the schools and colleges and have visited a variety of units, and this process will continue into the spring. I have also been actively engaged with our alumni, elected officials, and community members to get a clearer idea of who we are as an institution, what our values are, and how the community sees us and supports us. We are at a defining moment in the history of this institution, [and] we need to stand tall and proud as we work to define our mission and vision.

How are you gathering input for the Strategic Plan?

This work started in the 2016-17 academic year, and the committee had about 17 members. After I arrived, we expanded it to about 110 individuals across the University. [The committee currently is] made up of five working groups organized around our five core priorities.

What are the five core priorities?

1) Student Success: We need to focus on recruiting students, but also retaining them and graduating them in a timely manner so they become engaged global citizens.

2) Research Excellence: We are a Research 1 institution, and we need to continue to develop new, bold, and innovative research initiatives that also serve the needs of our community.

3) Diversity and Inclusion: We want to continue to be a model for diversity and inclusion, and ensure we have a campus climate where our diverse community feels welcomed and is welcomed.
4) Internationalization: We want to build our education-abroad programs, our international partnerships, our faculty- and student-exchange programs, and our collaborative research and academic programs – to increase UAlbany’s visibility and impact across the globe.

5) Service and Engagement: We want to be an institution deeply embedded in the community as an anchor institution. We are one of the largest employers in the region, and we want to continue to work closely with our community.

As we define our core priorities, our institutional identity and vision and mission, we are linking that to our marketing, capital-campaign and legislative priorities. As a result, we are beginning to speak a common language, which is critical to succeed as an institution.

PG: What is your theory on leadership, and how will you lead UAlbany to the next level?

HR: It comes down to working with excellent, committed individuals and teams. It is really about building partnerships. It is also about being trustworthy. I have always been a strong believer in leading by example.

PG: You lived in The Bronx for about 10 years when you were growing up. How does it feel to be back in New York State?

HR: My wife and I love New York. We have family members who still live in Brooklyn and other areas of New York. Being back in the state is very gratifying. I have met and talked with many students at UAlbany who come from The Bronx and Brooklyn, and they are incredibly proud to see that someone who spent some years in their boroughs could become president of this very prestigious institution.

PG: As a native of Puerto Rico and the first Hispanic president of a four-year SUNY campus, how does your background resonate with UAlbany students?

HR: I was raised by a single mother who made many sacrifices for me. Students see me and realize that if they work hard, are committed to their education, and continue to overcome challenges, they will be successful in their lives and careers.

PG: How is your wife, Rosy Lopez, adjusting to Albany?

HR: I have said from the beginning, you hired both Rosy and me. We have been married for 33 years; we have three grown children, and we are now empty-nesters. Rosy has been a strong supporter and a collaborator at all the campuses where I have served. She attends many events with me at UAlbany and is a big sports fan. In Texas, she volunteered with a food pantry and a community-garden program – she is in the process of identifying local organizations with whom she will work. So we are both adjusting very well, and we know that this is the right place for us.

Paul Grondahl is the director of the New York State Writers Institute at the University at Albany.
Created and produced by the University Art Museum, NYS Writers Institute and UAlbany Performing Arts Center in collaboration with WAMC Public Radio, this new series features leading figures from a variety of artistic disciplines in conversation about their creative inspirations, their craft and their careers. “Roundtable” host Joe Donahue conducts live on stage interviews followed by a Q&A with the audience.

www.albany.edu | 13
In August 2017, President Donald Trump’s national security adviser, H.R. McMaster, said, “it’s impossible to overstate the danger” posed by North Korea. He was referring to both the Communist nation’s leader, Kim Jong Un, as well as to its nuclear-weapon capabilities. The United Nations has adopted a series of resolutions sanctioning North Korea for its continuous firing of ballistic missiles; some cut more than 55 percent of refined petroleum products, including gasoline, going to the country. But the military threat to the United States persists. What can be done?

We asked Bonnie Jenkins, M.P.A.’88, a nuclear-weapons policy expert who, until January 2017, was coordinator for threat-reduction programs at the U.S. Department of State under President Barack Obama. Since last May, Jenkins, a board member of the Arms Control Association, has been a joint visiting fellow at the University of Pennsylvania Perry World House and the Brookings Institution, a Washington, D.C., think tank. UAlbany’s Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy presented her its 2013 Distinguished Alumna Award in Public Administration and Policy.

Jenkins acknowledged that while Obama was president, North Korea continued to pursue a nuclear weapon that can strike the United States. But she offered a rather pessimistic view of the situation as of mid-October 2017.

You worked in President Barack Obama’s administration, which employed a “strategic-patience” policy of gradually escalating sanctions with North Korea, but North Korea has continued to pursue nuclear weapons. How would you assess the success of that policy?

There are not a lot of great options, other than continue to use sanctions against North Korea, until you find a better way to try to deal with the situation – unless countries decided to negotiate. Has it been successful? No, because I think North Korea, for several reasons, wanted to develop a nuclear weapon, and one that can reach the U.S. Obviously, they’re feeling the sanctions, but not enough to stop their weapons development. They would rather have people suffer than give up their weapons. On the other hand, we’ve found some illegal transfers North Korea employed to get some money into their country, so the sanctions are having an effect – just not the effect that we want.
President Trump has suggested that a U.S. military response is on the table. How do you assess his policy toward North Korea?

The military response is always an option; it just may not be articulated as on the table and, obviously, you use that articulation when you think it’s going to be valuable … to get you what you want. But what’s the strategy? President Trump has obviously been a lot more willing to use more contentious language; it’s definitely not a wait-and-be-patient situation. It’s also Trump trying to be different from Obama and trying to give a sense that “I’m going to make the world different.” The problem is, I don’t know if it’s making the world different; it’s just creating a lot of confusion. Obviously, North Korea is not being persuaded by all the harsh rhetoric. It sets up a more glaring and difficult situation. When you raise the stakes like this and you still don’t have a way to get the threat escalation to stop, it makes more folks upset, but you still don’t have an answer.

What steps do you think should be taken to reduce the threat North Korea poses to the United States?

The first thing is to reduce the tension, because you’re not going to have anything happen if both sides are glaring at each other. You have a country that is obviously not going to be cowered by the U.S. And Kim Jong Un can also see the problems that Trump is having being president. So, unless we do something different, like diplomacy, I don’t see him necessarily saying, “I’ve got to run because the United States is after me.”

Make it a situation where you can possibly have a way forward. But you have to have a strategy; I don’t see a strategy. There’s no effort I see to significantly work with the other partners to develop a strategy. We’re very much out there by ourselves. We’re not really working with China and Japan and South Korea and Russia to try to find a way forward. The way it is now, it’s not really going anywhere; it’s just kind of stuck. We’re kind of putting ourselves in a corner.

He founded INCROUD, a social-commerce platform he recently sold to Veriown (where he is an executive board member). He owns Thistle Hill Winery, an award-winning organic winery and vineyard in Mudgee, Australia. Collaborating with a friend who works at NASA, he co-founded Flawless Photonics – a startup focused on manufacturing in space. He recently sold his ownership position in Baldface Lodge, an iconic ski resort in British Columbia.

On top of all that, Loughan is helping to manage his sons’ Hollywood careers – 15-year-old twins Max and Jack are executive producers for a science-based TV series with a major network. He also serves as an adviser for Max’s energy startup, which is developing a patent-pending ionic-energy system.

So what drives this self-described serial entrepreneur and proud UAlbany alum? An unquenchable desire to break paradigms and create success.

“I love to have a hand at bringing new technologies and business models to the world – big ideas that are disruptive and far reaching,” explained Loughan. “I have a healthy disregard for conventional wisdom.”

Loughan is best known for co-founding Octane Software, the world’s first cloudbased customer-relationship management (CRM) application, which sold – at the very peak of the dot-com boom in May 2000 – for more than $3.2 billion. He would later create the first-ever mobile CRM solution, which also grew at industry-record speed.

From his humble beginnings in rural Granville, N.Y., to his enormous success as a globe-trotting business maverick, Loughan’s career arc is a story of vision, risk-taking, tenacity, and hard work.

“It’s about being at the right place at the right time, but it’s also about being willing to capitalize on your opportunities,” said Loughan. “If you are going to do something never done before, there is only shooting for the fence.”

Though he would become one of the nation’s most successful and influential technology entrepreneurs, Loughan ironically never even intended to enter that industry. He had planned to attend law school in Michigan after earning his UAlbany degree in political science, but he lacked the funding to pay for tuition. Looking for a way to earn money quickly, Loughan deferred his law-school admission and applied for work at a growing Boston, Mass., software company – where he hustled his way into a job.

Clearly unqualified for the available positions (“I wasn’t even sure how to turn on a computer!” joked Loughan), he did not get a job offer. Loughan, however, would not take “no” for an answer. That evening, he waited for the company’s president in the parking garage. When the executive finally arrived, Loughan confronted him and told him, “You just made the worst mistake of your life!”

Though he acknowledged that he “probably scared the man half to death,” Loughan received a call from the firm the following day: They offered him the job.

That same moxie would later lead Loughan and several colleagues to develop the then-revolutionary concept for a cloud CRM platform. They had pitched the idea to their employer at the time, but received no interest. Certain that they were on the verge of a big idea, they decided to pursue the product on their own – working in their basements and garages to form what would ultimately become Octane Software. A few years later, Octane was sold in one of the largest non-public acquisitions in the history of the software industry.

Remember the software executive Loughan had confronted in the parking lot? He was one of Octane’s first investors – providing $7 million in seed money, and declaring it the best investment he ever made. “I guess he was right,” noted Loughan.

Though he has achieved remarkable success, Loughan acknowledged that not all of his at-bats have been hits. He believes that every experience, even the failures, has been valuable for him. “I learn from the wins,” said Loughan. “I learn even more from the losses.”

Loughan attributes his success to his ability to identify opportunities and his willingness to take risks – something he acknowledges is “not for the faint of heart.” He also credits his determination to always out-work the competition. He said that he learned this valuable lesson as a student at UAlbany.

“One day I learned that you have to work for everything ... you get what you earn,” said Loughan, who greatly appreciated the challenging and competitive environment at his alma mater. “Without UAlbany, I wouldn’t be where I am today.”

He believes that his UAlbany education helped instill a “hungrier” mindset, which gave him an edge over graduates from perhaps more prestigious institutions. “I have hired and fired many people from Ivy League schools,” said Loughan. “I prefer employees who are ready to work hard.”

These days, Loughan is particularly inspired by two young people close to home: Max and Jack. Following in their father’s footsteps, both young men are already taking college classes from universities that include Stanford and MIT, while pursuing their own entrepreneurial goals.

“For them, it’s about more than making money – they want to make the world a better place,” said Loughan. “They want to make their own mark.”

Just like their father, they never slow down.
As a teenager, Yvonne Garcia wanted to be trilingual. “That’s why I took languages at the University at Albany,” says the senior vice president and global head of Client Solutions, Investment Manager Services Group at State Street Corporation in Boston.

At Albany, where she majored in Spanish and minored in French, Garcia found “a very diverse group of students.” The Queens, N.Y., native adds, “That’s really what, in my mind, is required to be successful – to surround yourself with people from all different backgrounds, skill sets, and interests.” Her roommates on both the uptown campus and Alumni Quad included an education major, a theatre major, and other students whose academic pursuits differed from her own. “It was really nice to be surrounded by them.”

Garcia’s facility with languages, and her experience living with people of other backgrounds, expanded her post-graduate options. She earned an M.B.A. in finance and marketing at Boston University. Later, Garcia was Liberty Mutual’s Agency Corporation director of Marketing and Distribution Strategy, then vice president of Bank of America’s China Construction Bank Strategic Assistance. In the latter capacity, her work took her to China, Hong Kong, London, and Paris.

At State Street, Garcia still travels “a lot” since “my team is global.” She notes: “My group works with asset managers, asset owners, and insurance companies, helping them define their future state-operating model to enable them to innovate and transform. We help them make the right investment decisions and manage data more effectively.”

A Six Sigma Black Belt – a certification awarded by ASQ to people committed to corporate, organizational, and community quality – Garcia is also a busy volunteer. She serves as national chairwoman of ALPFA (the Association of Latino Professionals for America), an organization she joined around 2001. “We work with Latino professionals and students, helping guide them through their academic and professional journey. We also partner with Fortune 1000 companies, helping them to acquire and retain diverse talent and to develop that talent professionally,” explains Garcia, adding that ALPFA has 83,000 members, 41 professional chapters, and 155 student chapters in the United States.

In her work with young people, Garcia emphasizes the importance of education and its “strong correlation to power and freedom.” She says: “I always encourage individuals to go to school. You can be very smart, but if you don’t have the diploma to show, it can be challenging and limiting.”

One thing Garcia tries to impress upon students and young professionals is that they must “really understand the value you bring to who you are. At a very young age, you should know your worth, but also have the courage to act on it.”

Garcia also volunteers with a number of other organizations, including Milagros para Niños (Miracles for Children), a group she co-founded at Boston Children’s Hospital in 2009 to raise funds to support the medical needs of underserved Latino children. ALPFA and The Children’s Trust, a non-profit formed to end child abuse in Massachusetts, have honored Garcia for her commitment to children, the Latino community, and women. In 2015, she received the Women of Influence Award from the Boston Business Journal.

Her high-profile work with ALPFA and State Street Corporation casts Garcia as a role model. At the University at Albany, she looked up to Johnny Webster, then a faculty member in the former Department of Hispanic and Italian Studies. “He was my Spanish professor, and he also mentored me. He guided me through the M.B.A. application process,” Garcia recalls.

Garcia is the mom of a 16-year-old daughter, Izzy, “who’s looking at colleges now,” and a 10-year-old son, Max. “He’s my baby,” she says.

FOR SUCCESS

Michael Brown, B.A.’04
Brown started Death Wish in 2011 as a “side project” to his first venture, Saratoga Coffee Traders. The Waterford, N.Y., native was “living behind my mom’s garage” when he came up with the blend, which combined beans grown in India with some other varieties he had on hand. Brown dubbed his new product “Death Wish Coffee” and chose packaging that featured a skull-and-crossbones image he thought would pique consumer interest. Each bag noted that the contents were USDA-certified 100-percent organic and Free Trade.

“I didn’t have a business plan at the time,” acknowledges Brown, who majored in economics and minored in business administration at UAlbany. “I sold one bag one month, then two the next month. Eventually, I had enough sales coming in to hire one of my baristas to work with me.” The two pulled together a mailing list and put out the word about Death Wish on social media.

Brown caught a lucky break in 2013, when ABC’s “Good Morning America” called to request an interview. Impressed, the “GMA” team followed up the next day with another on-air visit to the shop, and “sales skyrocketed,” Brown remembers.

Business got another boost after a 30-second commercial for Death Wish aired during Super Bowl 2016. Intuit QuickBooks Small Business Big Game Competition sponsored the spot, “Storm’s a-Brewin.”

Approximately 90 percent of Death Wish sales are made online. A fulfillment center near Philadelphia ships the orders; Brown is looking to start a second in Reno, Nev., to reduce the costs of shipping to the western U.S. Death Wish Coffee is also distributed through Amazon.com.

If there’s anything Michael Brown savors as much as a cup of Death Wish Coffee, it must be the success his company has achieved in just six short years.

Death Wish, the self-proclaimed “world’s strongest coffee,” packs 427 milligrams of caffeine into each 8-ounce cup.

Coffee lovers who appreciate a strong brew can order online at www.deathwishcoffee.com and select from the following:

FLAVORS
- Death Wish Coffee
- Death Wish Cauldron Aged Pumpkin Coffee
- Valhalla Java
- Odinforce Blend

VARIETIES
- ground
- whole bean

Death Cups
platforms and, in Hawaii and on the West Coast, through Safeway grocery stores. In the Albany area, Price Chopper carries the brand, as do eight ShopRite stores in New York. “We’re still working to get into Target,” says Brown.

A 16,000-square-foot building in Round Lake, N.Y., houses grinding, packaging, and warehouse operations. Customer-service, marketing, and logistics teams are also headquartered there.

The lessons Brown learned at UAlbany prepared him well for the business world. Project Renaissance, then a living-learning experience for freshmen, was “fantastic,” and “I made some really amazing friends and learned how to handle myself,” recalls Brown, who later studied accounting at the University of Hawaii – Manoa and earned a master’s in that field from The College of Saint Rose.

Brown’s educational background enables him to correct mistakes quickly; “when things go a little haywire, I’m very analytical, which is good. But it’s also bad, because I have a hard time making decisions unless I have all the information and all the logic in place.”

Learning to delegate, he admits, “drives me crazy; it’s difficult. I used to be more hands-on. This business has become kind of like my baby.”

The company has found its niche. “We have one type of coffee at Death Wish; that helps us stay focused. We’re not trying to make something for everyone. We make our product for our specific customer.”

Brown describes the Death Wish customer as “the guy who’s a little rough around the edges, a hard worker, a family man. We target our marketing to that person and to others who identify with him. They’re enthusiastic about Death Wish Coffee. They tell their friends and family about it; then those people tell their friends and families. My mom, who’s in her 70s, drinks the coffee – and she tells me how great it is,” Brown adds with a smile.

He notes that the coffee’s strength reflects the “strong values” shared by both the people who work alongside him and those who purchase Death Wish. “Our goal is to make the coffee taste strong and pleasant, and to do what’s right for the world.”

Case in point: When new packaging inadvertently omitted the “100-percent organic” certification, customers contacted Brown to ask if the brand was no longer organic. “They’re very passionate people who are concerned about the environment,” says Brown.

Capital Region businesses using Death Wish Coffee in some of their products include:

The Old Albany Distilling Company: coffee-infused vodka

Rad Soap: body bar, body cream

“They’re great partners,” observes Death Wish founder and owner Brown, “and it’s fun to work with them.”
Sonya del Peral, B.A.’80

Growing a Business – and New York Agriculture

By Carol Olechowski

tudent. Linguist. Archeologist. Teacher. Lawyer. Mom. Throughout her life, Sonya del Peral has embraced many roles. In 2013, she took on two more: cider maker and promoter of New York State agriculture.

Several years ago, after developing a liking for hard cider, del Peral’s son, Alejandro, experimented with different blends and eventually perfected his own. Catskill Thunder earned a gold medal at the 2013 Great Lakes International Cider & Perry Competition, and soon, Nine Pin Ciderworks was established in Albany. The company’s name was inspired by Washington Irving’s legend of Catskill Mountains cider aficionado – and marathon napper – Rip Van Winkle.

Del Peral was flattered when her son asked her to join Nine Pin as in-house legal counsel. “I feel so lucky that the creative and enthusiastic young people here wanted me involved,” says the attorney, who practices intellectual-property, business-transaction, and real-estate law from her office at Bowers & del Peral, PLLC, in Chatham, N.Y. “The alcohol industry is very heavily regulated, so I was able to bring some know-how and skills because of my background.”

Del Peral cites both “hard work and good luck” as factors in Nine Pin’s success. “We were very lucky to receive New York State’s first farm-cidery license. We were able to get a lot of publicity that we otherwise could not have.” In addition, “a grant from Empire State Development in 2015 helped us expand our facilities.”

Located at 929 Broadway in Albany, Nine Pin Ciderworks is a year-round operation that includes a tasting room, as well as a seasonally open outdoor café. “We do a lot of production in the fall, but there are things to do all year long,” notes del Peral, the cidery’s manager.

Nine Pin purchases apples from several Capital Region orchards: “Adding value to local agriculture is our mission,” del Peral observes. “New York is No. 1 in the U.S. for apple varieties. We promote New York agriculture through the use of local apples.”

Nine Pin’s operations are based in its facility in Albany’s Warehouse District. “We have a variety of bottled and canned ciders that are sold all over New York State and in Massachusetts and Connecticut. We’re taking it one step at a time. Our license has a cap at 250,000 gallons, so we have lots of room to grow,” says del Peral, who plans to retire from her private law practice next September but will continue to use her legal expertise in alcohol-industry licensing for Nine Pin.

To prepare for Nine Pin’s launch, del Peral spent time on UAlbany’s uptown campus researching the cider industry, “so I appreciate the services that the University Libraries provide.” She also worked with the Small Business Development Center.

As an undergraduate anthropology major at Albany, del Peral visited Guatemala to participate in two archaeological digs organized by Professor Robert Carmack. She recalls: “We were uncovering a post-Classic Mayan city. It was amazing to visit the National Archives of Guatemala, to touch history by reading the primary source materials – the writings of the Spanish conquistadores and the priests – and to witness this meeting of the Old World and the New.”

Faculty member Colbert Nepaulsingh “was my favorite professor,” remembers del Peral, who minored in Spanish. “He taught an entire course, Don Quixote de la Mancha, on Cervantes’ book.”

Del Peral herself taught for several years after graduating summa cum laude from Albany. She returned to Guatemala to teach at the American School, then, having taken “enough courses” at the University to become fluent in French, she traveled to France, where she taught English. Back home, del Peral earned a master's in teaching from SUNY Binghamton. She continued her career, teaching Spanish in the Bethlehem (N.Y.) Central School District prior to earning a law degree from Albany Law School.

NIK SCHULTZ, B.A.’08

JAMAL RASOULY, B.S.’11
When Nik Schultz and Jamal Rasouly frequented the Campus Center as students, neither one thought he’d be returning to UAlbany just a few years later as an entrepreneur. As things turned out, however, both came back to operate food outlets there.

Schultz, who studied history and education, is the mastermind behind the popular Nikos Café. Located in the Campus Center’s West Addition, Nikos serves breakfast all day; its lunch and dinner offerings include souvlaki, gyros, Greek fries, and salads. The menu features meat and vegetarian options.

In the East Addition, accounting graduate Rasouly operates The Halal Shack, which brings “the best of Mediterranean and Middle Eastern flavors” to campus. Inspired by New York City street foods and authentic Afghan cuisine, the menu allows customers to build their own meals by combining a rice, naan, lettuce, or “zoodle” base with meat fillings, vegetable or cheese toppings, and one of six sauces.

A former Great Danes athlete, Schultz admitted he “wasn’t the best student at the beginning of my studies.” However, he credits his roundabout journey — and legendary football head coach Bob Ford — for his success with school, sports, and later, Nikos.

“I was able to improve my grades and become a leader on the football field at UAlbany. It was during this time that I made connections and grew a network in and around the University that is directly attributable to my initial success in owning my own business,” Schultz remembered.

Rasouly already knew a thing or two about running a successful food venue from growing up in a family of established restaurateurs. Despite that ingrained knowledge, he still credits his years at UAlbany for his success.

“My time as a student gave direction to my ambition,” recalled Rasouly, who also minored in business administration. “From the basics of time management to capstone courses that taught me how to make business plans, [the University] was vital to my growth and really prepared me to be a business owner.”

Rasouly’s goal for The Halal Shack was simple: “to unite cultures and people through food, one sauce’n meal at a time!” Based on the steady flurry of customers and the warm welcomes from the staff, it seems his vision has been realized. The Halal Shack also has a charitable component, donating a portion of its profits to local charities.

Both entrepreneurs are enthusiastic about the energy and buzz at the Campus Center. Working there, Schultz said, “allows me to be around young, energetic people full of life and ambition. Coach Ford always said working on a college campus is one of the most fulfilling things that anyone can do in their professional career.”

Though Nikos and The Halal Shack keep the two alums busy, their work doesn’t stop at the Campus Center. Schultz’s NC Schultz LLC, which runs Anton’s Greek Restaurant on New Scotland Avenue in Albany, caters events and operates Spartan Fit Meals. Rasouly owns Spin Sauce, the first Mediterranean and Middle Eastern manufacturer of condiments in the U.S. Spin Sauce, which also donates 10 percent of its proceeds to orphanages and communities around the world, has been featured in The New York Times and Food & Wine as one of the best new condiments on the market.

Rasouly and Schultz have some advice for UAlbany students who might want to follow the same track they did to business success: Focus on learning from your mistakes, and pay attention to the little details along the way.

In Trinidad and Tobago, “soccer is everywhere, from the streets to the Queen’s Park Savannah,” said Adrian Foncette, a goalkeeper for the national team, the Soca Warriors. He grew up playing soccer in his hometown, La Horquetta, and in Cascade, where he spent time with his grandmother in a home on Foncette Road, named for their family. The game – and the position of goalkeeper, specifically – are in Foncette’s blood: His father was a goalkeeper, and his cousins all play that position on local teams.

Soccer linked Foncette closely with family and tradition, but the sport also afforded him a University at Albany education. Though his enrollment was delayed a year when a car accident nearly cost him his left arm, he was able to play again after undergoing six surgeries. Scouted by Johan Aarnio, head coach of the men’s soccer program, and offered a full scholarship, Foncette enrolled in 2008 to study economics and business administration. He recalled his experience at UAlbany as “the best four years of my life.”

Added Foncette, who started as first-string goalkeeper during his sophomore year: “The UAlbany soccer program was a professional one and pointed me in the direction in which I wanted to go. The staff – Coach Aarnio, R.J. Bevers, Anthony Benyarko, Jason Ramundo, Trevor Gorman, just to name a few – all helped me along the way. I’m very grateful to them all.”

Two years after graduation, Foncette received a call from the Soca Warriors. He joined the team in 2014 and currently plays third-string goalkeeper. Last Oct. 10, on his 29th birthday, Foncette played one of his first World Cup qualifying games. Trinidad and Tobago defeated the U.S. 2-1.

The victory was an important one “for me and the team, but also the entire country,” Foncette noted, recalling that, in 1989, a U.S. win kept Trinidad and Tobago from competing in the World Cup. Foncette, his teammates, and their fellow citizens saw last fall’s victory as revenge for the 1989 loss.

Eventually, Foncette plans to try to secure a contract to play abroad, either in the U.S. or in Europe, but for now, he’s focusing on his home country. “My plans for the future are to stay healthy, keep fit, and keep playing regularly while putting Trinidad and Tobago back on the map by playing at a high level,” he said.

Jean Pulver Hague of Atlanta retired in December, after providing counseling services and student advising for many years. A fire near Elsa Moberg Cox’s home in Oceanside, Calif., was contained just before her community suffered any damage in December. Bob Kittredge and Diana traveled to their daughter Susan’s home outside San Diego for Thanksgiving. Their son David is battling cancer and is currently undergoing chemotherapy. Bob celebrated his 90th birthday in January. Anne Sulich Raser’s granddaughter passed the exams required to become a certified actuary. Anne has been participating in the Women’s Health Initiative (WHI) study for more than 24 years. She completes an annual health questionnaire and shares medical records with the UCLA Medical Center; findings are published regularly. She enjoys participating in WHI’s research. Bob Kloepfel still visits Russ Bailey every Thursday. Bob reports that Russ isn’t doing too well. Gloria Maistelman Herkowitz attended a family wedding in Woodbury, Long Island, last fall and spent time with her four grandsons and four great-grandchildren.

Richard Foster has had several serious falls but still plays bridge and the piano. Ursula Neuhaus Schiff and her 16-year-old dog, Abby, are doing well. Ursula’s sons live in California and visited her this winter. Her younger son, retired from a career in computer science, is now pursuing an education degree and hopes to teach math full time. Her oldest grandchild has moved to Chicago, where he is studying the motion-picture industry. Freddy Laemmerzahl Miller traveled to Branson, Mo., and watched five shows, and celebrated her grandson’s graduation from the University of Arizona in December. She spent Christmas in Arizona and celebrated her brother’s birthday and New Year’s in Virginia. Bonnie Lewis Adkins and husband Lee sold their home in Middlebury, Conn., in early September, and with the help of many relatives, moved to a nearby continuing-care complex (contact your class councilor for mailing address). Bonnie states they are very happy in their “new digs” and are making many new friends. They will soon have a total of seven great-grandchildren. Joe Zanchelli and Joyce are still very happy living in the Saratoga Springs area. They stay busy volunteering with six different organizations. (The UAlbany Alumni Association class councilors group is their favorite!) Jerry Dunn and wife Shirley Wiltse ‘51 are approaching “senior status,” and decided to move to an independent-living apartment in East Greenbush, N.Y. (contact your class councilor for mailing address). They celebrated their 67th wedding anniversary and Jerry’s 90th birthday last year. Of their four children, two are retired from positions with New York State, one is teaching in Vermont, and the other teaches in Virginia. Jerry and Shirley have nine grandchildren and one great-granddaughter. In 1970, Jerry organized a golf group of eight players that grew to 24 over the next 46 years. He has many fond memories of living in Sayles Hall Annex, where he met many great friends. Class Councilor Joe Zanchelli wishes you great health, and hopes to see you at our 70th reunion in 2019. Class notes councilor: Joe Zanchelli, jzanch@yahoo.com

Irwin Baamel and Elise DeSeve are doing well. They live in a retirement community in Brea, Calif. Irwin is working on a large improvement project in his industrial park. Ruth Marschner Boynton and Dick celebrated their 64th wedding anniversary in September. Their children are doing well. One son is a pharmacist with a wife and two children. The other son is a Lutheran minister married to another Lutheran minister; together, they have two children. Ruth and Dick’s daughters are a professor in the School of Journalism at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, and a school counselor with one child. Lila Lee Silva Harrington caught the flu on the plane to Scottsdale, Ariz., in January, but it didn’t ruin her two-week visit with Leslie. In July, Lila and Leslie “got their lobster fix” while visiting relatives in Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. Lila attended her family reunion at Chautauqua Lake near Buffalo. She visited Leslie in Arizona again in September. Lila’s sons are doing well: Keith works at Fidelity Investments, Tim works at Corning Glass Works, and Todd is doing computer conversions at Horizon. Lila keeps in touch with Maggie Hoskings Winne and enjoys a monthly lunch with Joe Zanchelli ‘49 and Joyce ‘52. Lila celebrated her 90th birthday in February. Marjory Lyons is still writing memoirs, and does book reviews at the library and at her church. She continues to teach a Friday writing class that her students refer to as “Marjory’s Friday Writers.” Marjory co-wrote Think You Can’t Write? Think Again! A Foolproof Guide to Getting Your Book Written at Last! with her student, author/lecturer Beverly Johns. Rhoda Riber Mones and Mel are planning to move to Virginia at the encouragement of their son, who currently lives there. They have enjoyed living comfortably in San Diego for 31 years. Malcolm Slakter and Nancy of Hawaii are dealing with age-related health issues. They keep in touch with their three children and five grandchildren through texting, email, phone calls, Facetime, and the occasional visit. Two of their children are retired; the youngest has two children in college, and a 16- and a 13-year-old at home. Harold “Sparky” Vaughn spent five weeks in Firenze, Italy. Five of his eight children visited. Sparky’s son Eric was unable to join his siblings due to work with Congress. Sparky continues to work on an anti-human-trafficking project; progress of the collaborative effort between the Rotary Club of Washington, D.C., and the Rotary Club of Bangkok has been affected by the death of the highly respected king, his successor son, and the role of the generals. Audrey Hartman White traveled to Orlando and met up with her brother from Olympia and her sister from New York City, as well as other family and friends. Two of Audrey’s grandchildren live in Houston and, fortunately, escaped the flood. Sean is in the PA program at Baylor, performing rotations in Houston-area medical institutions. Jeanne Bowen Walsh passed away Aug. 8, 2017. Basil Karpik died Sept. 29. Contact your class councilor for the mailing addresses of family members, should you wish to send your condolences.

Members of the Class of 1952 gathered in September to celebrate our 65th-anniversary reunion. Many of us met up at the Albany Marriott Friday evening, September 15; several joined us for a college trivia quiz (won by Mary Anne Lanni) and the reunion luncheon the following day. A total of 16 class members attended the reunion (24 in all, including guests): Joan Roeder Barron; John Bowker; Victoria Baldino Driver; Jeanne Seymour Earle; Helene Paten Gordon; Tom Holman; Jane Minckler Jennings; Anna Morrissey Karpik; Joan Bennett Kelly; Mary Anne Fitzgerald Lanni; Marilyn Smith Mackey; David Manly; Evelyn Knapp Stewart; Virginia Maurer Tracey; Marilyn Johnson VanDyke; and Joyce Leavitt Zanchelli.

The highlight of the weekend was the luncheon. Dave Manley recited his Prayer of Remembrance, and attendees enjoyed a slideshow of memories from past reunions. Mary Anne Lanni recently had lunch with Jean Greenshields Burns, Anne Sullivan Morgan, Ruth Dunn Reid and Kathy Ryan Ivimey. Kathy recently returned to the Albany area. Vickie Eade Eddy’s son, Brig. Gen. Christopher Eddy, is the author of The Secrets of Leadership Found in Movie Quotes, available on Amazon. In 2018, Vickie will become a great-grandmother for the first time. Madeline Weitlauf Huchro and her husband sold their Florida house in September 2016. While visiting their son in Charlotte, N.C., Madeline fell and had to go to rehab until June. They are now in Westport, N.Y., with their daughter, experiencing a northern New York State winter. Both of Tom Holman’s residences were impacted by Hurricane Irma. His condo in Jupiter, Fla., had minor damage, but the small hotel in St. Maartens, where he spends the winter, was severely damaged and is still being repaired. Tom hoped to return to St. Maartens in the winter. Jeanne Seymour Earle is retiring from her job... at the library. She hopes to reactivate her neighborhood association. Nancy Frey Pettinelli moved to Missouri to be close to one of her sons. She reports that things are “different” in Missouri, such as the disregard of driving laws and the cost of things being two or three times more than they were in the east. Shirley Rosenbaum plays violin in the Morgantown Community Orchestra. Her grandson performs in the Kentucky Youth Orchestra and recently won first place in a cello contest, and her daughter teaches music to young children. Shirley’s son-in-law, a physics professor, plays the piano. Kitty Kloser Irons is having trouble with her eyes, which has limited one of her favorite hobbies, reading. She was hoping to receive a Kindle for Christmas. Joyce Leavitt Zanchelli and Joe ’49 are stubbornly remaining in their large house because they love hosting their growing family whenever possible. The Zanchellis welcomed their grandson Michael’s wife, Ashley, to the family at a beautiful wedding in Washington, D.C., last May. The family now totals 19.

The Class of 1953 Red Devils will celebrate our 65th-year reunion in October, 2018 during Homecoming Weekend! Please contact your class councilor if you’re interested in joining the reunion-planning committee.

Irene Brezinsky McDonald moved to a retirement community following Dan’s death. “It’s an adjustment for sure, but safe with many activities. The biggest adjustment, as many of you know, is the death of one’s spouse.” Doug Nielsen and Gall moved to a two-bedroom apartment at The Hearth at Liverpool, a senior-housing facility in Liverpool, N.Y., to live closer to their granddaughter and her family. They recently welcomed great-grandson Samuel Clancy. Another Nielsen granddaughter has been in China for the past year teaching English and taking courses in Chinese at Beijing University. She is the fourth generation of teachers in Doug’s family. Peggy Smith Stafford is living with her daughter Kathryn and son-in-law in Penn Yan, N.Y. She is being cared for by her daughter, and enjoys seeing the lovely birds in their backyard. The family has started the process of building a home in North Carolina. Herb Their’s daughter Holli was elected to the Tiburon, Calif., town council in November. His oldest granddaughter will graduate from Texas A&M in May, and his younger grandson will celebrate his bar mitzvah in August. Herb is working on two STEM-based modules that focus on energy in students’ lives and are for use in middle-school classrooms. Understanding and Using Energy and Technology and Energy and Efficiency in Lighting and Life will be published by Lab-Aid this year. Herb would be pleased to send further information about those topics to anyone interested. Contact your class councilor for Herb’s mailing and email address.

Joan DeVinny Bitely’s two great-grandchildren recently moved to Japan with their mother and their father, who’s in the Navy. Joan went on a Baltic cruise last summer and visited St. Petersburg, where she “saw those beautiful decorated eggs!” She is still involved with several groups, including Friends of the Library and Elderstudy of UMW, and manages to fit some tennis in, as well. Joan sends “best wishes for good health to all my ol’ classmates.” Your councilor’s freshman-year roommate, Linda Hopkins McGrath, spent two weeks in California with her son Tom for Thanksgiving. Family members from Rochester and Brooklyn joined them. Linda, along with several other classmates, was in Florida during Hurricane Irma. “Hurricane Irma came through Naples with a vengeance, with winds up to 164 mph. It was quite an experience.” She noted the strengthening winds and first signs of damage, the eerie stillness in the eye of the storm, and the devastation to come. Linda’s home had minor damage; large trees were uprooted at the golf course nearby. She says people are still struggling to recover and rebuild following the storm.

Caroline Gazulis Johnson has a son and twin daughters. She lives in the Tampa area, across the street from a male friend who met last year. Caroline says, “I have traveled the world and my bucket is empty, so I play bridge, poker, and blackjack.” She would love to reconnect with classmates who happen to be in the Tampa area. Millie Foote Frandino Sheerin and Jim of Cape Cod would love to attend a 65th-year reunion while they’re still able to see and drive.

Nancy Bush and Nancy Fleming traveled to South Carolina to view the solar eclipse from the path of totality. Nan was named head of her church’s education and spirituality component, making her the leader of 11 committees as part of a major church reorganization. Bob Ashfield recently gave up his home in Houston for a support facility in College Station. In July, Charline Clymer Stettler and Professor F.W.O. Stettler left wintry New Zealand to visit family in the Adirondacks and celebrate the birth of Charline’s third great-grandchild. In September, Dee Montalbano moved from her longtime home in Boulder to a new townhouse community in Eugene, Ore., to be near her daughter. “I am loving my new digs,” she says. Dee is still passionate about mature women’s issues and regularly conducts writing workshops solely for women. She intends to return to her own writing soon.

Class members who were able to gather in Albany for our 60th-year reunion had a wonderful time catching up with each other and reminiscing. We missed our dear classmate Ben Lindeman, who was closely involved with planning our activities and passed away shortly before the reunion. Attendees enjoyed the welcome reception at the University Art Museum; the cocktail hour at the reunion hotel; and a luncheon at Treviso, an Italian-American restaurant. Joyce Schueler Thomas lives in downtown San Mateo, Calif., on the San Francisco Peninsula near Stanford University and Silicon Valley. “One son lives in the East Bay; my daughter lives and works in Washington, D.C.; and my youngest, the father of two lovely grandchildren ages 4 and 1½, lives in Santa Cruz.” Joyce previously lived in Berkeley, Marin, and Vancouver before returning to the Bay Area 40 years ago. She returned to work as a substitute teacher in 1984, then worked at a news office at Stanford before she began freelancing as a copy editor. She has several clients from Stanford and UC-Berkeley, and has edited books on Asian economies and national oil companies, and one historical novel. Joyce has gone on several Princess cruises. She enjoys reading and manages to fit in some dancing and swimming. She has been back to New York State only twice – to Albany in 1997, and to New York City in 2003. June Frankland Baker sent good wishes from Richland, Wash. Jane Slezak is running the family business in Amsterdam, N.Y., and serves as a volunteer instructor for the Literacy Zone. She retired after teaching chemistry for 25 years at Fulton-Montgomery Community College. John Rookwood lives in Charlestown, R.I. Bob Reuss and Pat moved to Venice, Fla. Helen Konefal Bartlett of Walden, N.Y., retired from teaching. She has done volunteer income taxes for the elderly for 14 years. Helen visits her son in Alaska frequently. Betty Sigety Leidigh lives in Lake Mary, Fla., and is a bookkeeper for her son’s business. Marcia Levine Weinberg lives in the Albany area and enjoys visiting her grandchildren in Chicago and the Boston area. Sandra Legai King and her husband have traveled extensively. She spends time in Florida while maintaining her home in Wanaksink Lake, N.Y. After retirement and many years of volunteer activities, Joan VanDusen Johnson continues to play bridge the way she learned in college. Barbara Ellers Traxel stays busy with senior-citizen activities, gardening, reading, and attending concerts. John Benton of Minnesota says, “Life is good.” Mary Furner of Santa Barbara, Calif., retired from UCSB’s history department. Howard Bagley remembers when it snowed 6 inches the night of the Bunny Hop in April 1957, and the gang at O’Heaney’s. Carol Kinghorn has had a busy professional life and enjoys painting portraits of colleagues and family. Nancy Schneider Sochia lives in Canton, N.Y. Your class councilor, Sheila Lister Bamberger, would like to thank all who attended the reunion.

“Thank you” to all who responded with your updated contact information! We’re working with the Alumni Association to find missing contact info for classmates. If you are in touch with any fellow Red Devils, please send their information, including name, email address, phone number, and/or mailing address, to your class councilor at melandsis@yahoo.com. Dave Pause has been married for 53 years and has two children and five grandchildren, three of them in college. A fourth will start next year. Doug is on the road to recovery after suffering major complications following a heart operation. He retired from the Schenectady school district in 1994. He enjoyed his last endeavor, driving vehicles up and down the East Coast for Enterprise. Nancy Wirtz recently moved from one side of Paradise, Calif., to the other and is now within walking distance of her daughter’s home. She is enjoying retirement. Nancy volunteers at the local Salvation Army office and enjoys being in the American Association of University Women, especially the book group. She has seven grandchildren who live in Maui and San Jose. June Perry Davin of Jupiter, Fla., remembers bailing out of upstate New York in 1981 with little money and no job, but she has never looked back. June taught English at three schools in Palm Beach County and retired in 2006. She has been working part time at the Jupiter Lighthouse. June recently traveled to Italy and Croatia. She visits NYC a few times each year. For four years, she has led a book club centering on Florida history. She says hello to her Chi Sigma Theta sorority sisters. Don Cohen stayed in Del Ray

Beach, Fla., throughout the holidays and winter months. He now has a pacemaker, but says it’s working fine and his heartbeats “are exactly regular—one per second.” Margie Kropac

Paul of Los Angeles visited Barbara Smith Passino in Savannah, Ga., and enjoyed a side trip to Charleston. They enjoyed great weather and collected some unique jewelry in their travels. Gail Kasparian D’Onofrio has vacationed with Gamma Kappa sisters Marcia Marion Bailey, Judy Kiehl, Rosie Kverek, and Joanne Simons LaFay at Lake George; Sedona, Ariz.; and Long Island. They’ve been friends for 60 years! Gail’s husband, Tony, passed away in 2011. They traveled to Egypt, Turkey, South America, Europe, China and throughout the USA; Gail continues to travel with her sister. Last year, they cruised to New Zealand and Australia. After playing the organ at St. Sarkis Armenian Apostolic Church for 53 years and retiring, Gail was honored with an award from the archbishop. Fran Pavela Zwicklbaumer and Franz of Naples, Fla., stay busy in retirement with 11 grandchildren. They enjoy visiting their grandchildren, who attend the University of Virginia, Richmond, Keuka, William and Mary, and soon, Elon. Fran and Franz play golf, travel, and enjoy time with friends. They recently visited Japan, Korea, and China, and were surprised by the beauty there, as well as by the cordiality of the people. Fran spends the summer at Friends Lake in the Adirondacks and holidays with family. Mel Horowitz is doing well despite his continued struggle with a rare lymphoma. It hasn’t stopped him from volunteering for several organizations, including Rotary and the U.S.–China Peoples Friendship Association, and enjoying vacations in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Las Vegas, and Florida with his wife, Sissy. His is proud of all four of his grandchildren; the oldest attends Savannah College of Art and Design. Ruby “Candy” Campbell Cook of Sarasota, Fla., hopes everyone had a Merry Christmas and Happy Hanukkah, and wishes all a healthy 2018. We regret to share sad news about our classmates: Gale Neller Harris passed away in May, and Constance Dorland Herodes passed away in October. Connie’s husband, Dick ’59, shared her obituary: “She was grateful during her final days to be able to say an individual goodbye to all her grandchildren, sons, daughters-in-law and husband and to be able to share personal recollections of a life well lived.” Author Diane Woodward Sawyer won first-place gold medals for “Best Mystery” and “Best Suspense/Thriller” at the 2017 Florida Authors and Publishers Association President’s Book Awards for her latest novel, The Tell-Tale Treasure. The cold-case missing-person story is set in St. Petersburg. Diane was invited to be a guest panelist at the Venice Book Fair and Writers Festival in March. Her next book, Trouble in Tikal, is set in Guatemala and will be released by Southern Yellow Pine Publishing in April.

Dear 1967 Classmates:
The Class of 1967 “Green Gremlins” celebrated their 50th-anniversary reunion during Homecoming, Oct. 20-22, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of our graduation from UAlbany. Some 40 Gremlins and their guests returned to UAlbany for the once-in-a-lifetime 50th-year reunion weekend. UAlbany truly rolled out the green carpet to warmly welcome us back home to campus.
The entire University campus was in full throttle with a kaleidoscope of activities for Homecoming Weekend. So we had a marvelous opportunity to enjoy a great taste of University life today. Our 50th-year reunion weekend would not have happened without the talented and ever-faithful planning committee. I wish to recognize and formally express profound appreciation to the 50th-Year Reunion Planning Committee — Stephanie DeSimone Bollam, Ann Holcomb Fairbank and Carol Marohn Zahurak — for their extraordinarily central role in skillfully and splendidly organizing an action-packed three days of 50th-year reunion activities filled with lively discussion, great laughter, and wonderful memories. Additionally, I am tremendously grateful to the numerous classmates who graciously joined in many aspects of the reunion planning, from simply a telephone call with an idea, to providing up-to-date information on classmates, and, most of all, to contacting and urging classmates to come back to the University for our 50th.

Highlights of the occasion were:
Friday, Oct. 20, 2017
- Welcome Reception at the University Art Museum, followed by a Class of 1967 Meet and Greet

Saturday, Oct. 21, 2017
- President’s Breakfast and Class of 1967 Induction into the Half-Century Club, during which we had the unique opportunity to hear and meet the new University President. Dr. Havidán Rodríguez gave an open and warm speech. He paid a lovely, warm tribute to our beloved 1967 Class, with special praise to our dear classmate Ruth Silverman Bald for her dedication and loyalty in traveling from Paris, France to join in our 50th.
- Sorority and Fraternity Coffee Hour
- Great Dane Pre-Game Event with special reserved tables for our ‘67 classmates to enjoy a lunch buffet with other Great Danes fans
- Football Game: UAlbany Great Danes vs. Maine Black Bears.
- Class of 1967 Cocktail Reception on Downtown Campus in the elegant “Hawley Library” with its 23 Van Ingen murals and famed glass-stained windows. We were treated to brief but succinctly retrospective remarks by Catherine Dwyer, Director of Dewey Library, about “Hawley Library” and the part it now plays in University life.
- Class of 1967 Reunion Dinner, held in the splendid setting of what was once the Milne School Library on the Downtown Campus. We thoroughly enjoyed a sumptuous dinner surrounded by the breathtaking Lithgow murals and Thorvaldsen friezes.

Sunday, Oct. 22, 2017
- Class of 1967 “Until We Meet Again” Breakfast
For those of us who were blessed to attend the 50th-Year Reunion Dinner, we were happily entertained by a specially composed and choreographed musical reflection by Stephanie DeSimone Bollam, titled “Western Avenue.” Her original musical composition was sung to the Beatles’ tune “Penny Lane.” Stephanie’s brilliant musical reflection was, quite simply, an extraordinarily wonderful and lively look back on memorable traditions and places from our shared, stirring undergraduate days. Stephanie and her cast of ’67 performers surely WOWED us with their great musicianship and their great Class of ’67 spirit. Stephanie is surely an expert on all things terpsichorean.

I wish to offer a tremendous thank you to our ’67 classmates for joining our 50th-Year Reunion as we reconnected and thoroughly enjoyed the company of old friends and acquaintances, met some classmates we did not know before, and re-discovered the matchless experience of our beloved Alma Mater. This letter is to share some of the highlights of our richly memorable and greatly fun-filled three days of our 50th-Year Reunion with the hope that you will stay connected and plan now to attend our 55th-Year Reunion. I welcome your comments and thoughts for our next ’67 Class Reunion in 2022. Let us continue “living the spirit of the ’60s in our seventies” as we gloriously did this past Oct … I am waiting to hear from you!

Gratefully and many blessings always,

Fifty years ago, we left the University at Albany (known then as “SUNYA”) to follow our dreams. Many of us thought we knew what our futures would be; some of us were still deciding. Today, we have experienced many ups and downs and have seen our dreams come true, or seen them replaced by other, sometimes unlikely, results. Regardless, I know every one of you looks back to our college years as a wonderful time in our lives. I still remember my first year living at Alden Hall and taking classes in different buildings down on Western Avenue and Washington Avenue. Moving into a space the size of a hotel room with two other girls was a very scary moment for me. The Class of ’68 was the first to live and take courses on the “old” campus, and attended class on the “new” uptown campus. Dutch and Colonial Quads were our homes. I still remember many of the places we frequented, including “the WT”, Yezzis, Casaleros, and Cosimos. We had all-girl and all-boy dormitories and curfews. We all became closer friends because of those rules! Now our lives are different, but we have the chance to reconnect at our alma mater Oct. 19-21, 2018, to celebrate our 50th-year reunion! Your class councilors and UAlbany Alumni Association staff will plan events for the weekend. We would love for you to get involved! Volunteer by reaching out to your friends and fellow classmates from 68 by phone, email, or in person to help spread the word. Share current photos, as well as any taken during your college years. Maybe we can feel the same as we felt back when we started at UAlbany in 1964! Update your contact information so you can receive reunion information.

Charlotte Biblow, an environmental attorney at Farrell Fritz, was named a 2017 New York Metro Super Lawyer. Donald Sapienza passed away in August following a battle with cancer.

UAlbany’s Benevolent Association Lives Up to Its Name

Founded in the 1920s, the University at Albany Benevolent Association initially supported dormitory construction at the New York State College for Teachers. Its first projects, Pierce Hall and Sayles Hall, opened on what is now the downtown campus in 1935 and 1941, respectively. “Alumni themselves raised the funds for the dormitories,” noted Benevolent Association board member Canon Kay Hotaling, B.S.’67, M.S.’70. “As students, many had lived in private homes, or commuted. When they graduated, they gave back to the college.”

The association sold the dorms to New York State in the 1960s and refocused its mission from providing housing for University at Albany students to supporting them through scholarships. Explained Benevolent Association President Kristina Moran Muller, B.S.’92, M.A.’99: “Several of the scholarships are designated to certain academic programs based on provisions of a will, but a majority of the recipients are selected by the University’s Office of Financial Aid. Individual departments select recipients; the Benevolent Association does not get involved in the selection process.”

The association provides $100,000 annually to support students. Each award varies from $250 to $500, “but the decision [regarding the amount] lies with the department,” said Muller.

The Benevolent Association, added Muller, is “a quiet organization that really just serves one purpose: to oversee the funds and ensure they are managed properly. We are very proud of our long history with the University.”

Like Muller, Hotaling, now in her 70s, honors the association’s past while looking to its future: She hopes that younger alumni will step forward to serve on the nine-member board. The Benevolent Association meets a few times a year, and while she has found that that amount of time represents “a minimal effort,” Hotaling said that prospective board members should be dedicated to the Benevolent Association’s mission.

Any candidate wishing to serve on the Benevolent Association Board of Directors must be approved by board members and by the Alumni Association board. Please email alumniassociation@albany.edu for more information about the Benevolent Association.
Meet Katarina.

Katarina Manzi knows what she wants to do with her life. “I’m going to medical school to be a neurosurgeon,” she declares without hesitation. Being able to attend UAlbany with the encouragement of The Chi Sigma Theta Scholarship has put her on the path to achieving that dream.

Katarina has taken full advantage of what the University has to offer. In addition to her intense focus on her academic studies, Katarina has found opportunities to serve her community, through the Presidential Honors Society, which has a strong service focus on campus, and The POET community service program that helps freshman students acclimate to the University.

Homecoming Weekend Oct. 19-21. If you’d like to contribute ideas or help plan reunion events, please contact Nancy. It was decided by many classmates that remaining class funds go to the UAlbany Fund. Larry Bartimer has been a partner with Portfolio Strategy Group, a registered investment advisor firm, since 2006. His 24-year-old fraternal twin sons work at JPM and Slalom Consulting, and fraternal twin daughters attend college at Brown University and Colgate. Larry is involved with business fraternity Delta Sigma Pi and organizes alumni gatherings in Manhattan twice a year. Nancy Benz has worked in non-profit management for more than 25 years and has experience in fundraising, board and volunteer development, public relations, and marketing. She started her own fundraising business focusing on small to mid-sized non-profit organizations that have limited development staff. Nancy has three sons and is involved in her community. Barbara Bakal Borys and Michael Borys celebrated their 38th wedding anniversary. Their son Gregory, 27, lives and works in NYC as an investment banker. Their daughter Alexandra, 32, is an art therapist currently living in Colorado with her husband and two children, ages 1 and 3. After 21 years of active duty, Joseph Bulger III retired from the U.S. Navy as a commander, then transitioned to the defense industry. Ten years later, he started a company that evaluates satellite communications terminals and data-link testing. Joseph’s son began working for the company after completing a tour in the U.S. Air Force as a ground RADAR systems technician. Joseph’s daughter is a senior at San Francisco State University. Susan Marek Kasso manages residential properties in NYC. Peter Matineau of Albany walks the University’s Purple Path regularly. He worked for the New York State Senate Finance Committee from 1978-90. Robin Nissan of Washington, D.C., works for the Department of Defense, managing environmental chemistry projects. Her 3-year-old granddaughter and 6-month-old grandson live in Norfolk, Va. Robin’s eldest son is on the U.S. Navy ship Comfort in Puerto Rico. Her middle son works in student affairs at the University of California in Santa Cruz. Her daughter is working for a 3D printer start-up company in Cambridge, Mass. Marcus Peterzell is hoping to reconnect with old friends at the reunion. Jeffrey Segal completed his 12th year as chair of the political-science department at Stony Brook University. He is a visiting professor of American Politics at Harvard for the 2017-2018 academic year. Adrienne Ross Scanlan left upstate New York for the Pacific Northwest many years ago. Her recent book Turning Homeward – Restoring Hope and Nature in the Urban Wild is a Washington State Book Award 2017 finalist. Contact her via email at adrienne@adrienne-ross-scanlan.com. Bob Stern has worked for the New York State Assembly as a policy analyst for more than 30 years. He has four grandchildren. Last year, he and several classmates gathered for a mini-reunion in NYC. A graduate of Drury College and the University of Chicago, Reese taught religion and philosophy at several institutions prior to joining the UAlbany faculty. He was the author of 12 books, including the Dictionary of Philosophy and Religion and Philosophers Speak of God. Reese traveled extensively and earned many awards, including a Ford Foundation grant and a Fulbright. After retiring at age 82, he taught for OASIS, the continuing-education enrichment program for adults.

For nearly 40 years, Reese advocated the establishment of a campus location where retired faculty could continue their intellectual pursuits while promoting the University’s mission of education, research, and public. Established in 2006 in University Administration Building (UAB) 134, the center became known as the William L. Reese II, Ph.D., Emeritus Center in 2015. Its programs are open to current and retired faculty and staff, as well as to the public.

Reese’s survivors include two daughters, a son-in-law, and two grandchildren.
Erika Irish Brown, B.S.’91, global head of Diversity & Inclusion for Bloomberg L.P., returned to UAlbany as keynote speaker at the winter International Celebration, held Dec. 7 to recognize graduating international students, students who have studied abroad, exchange students, and visiting scholars.

Brown, who collaborates with Bloomberg’s senior management to develop and drive the company’s global strategy and its approach to diversity and inclusion, addressed the topic of successful global citizenship. “While the talent pool, business, and markets have never been more global,” she observed, “there are still far too many places where women and other diverse groups are not included or able to contribute, or able to be authentic in the workplace. There are places where the political environment supports regression and exclusion, rather than progression and inclusion. We only need to open the newspapers and watch the news to know that the global landscape has changed dramatically. But there is a silver lining: The current environment has raised the awareness for many who only now recognize there is still so much to be done in order to advance global diversity and inclusion and equality in the workplace and the world.”

In addition, Brown reflected on her time at the University at Albany. “There are many things – mobile phone, personal computer – I wish I had as a college student. … While there were a lot of things I did not have, I did receive a stellar education – an education that enabled me to compete with my contemporaries as a financial analyst at an elite Wall Street firm upon graduation. “At that time, before the dot-com boom, securing a role as an analyst was the brass ring, and while I had a major exposure gap to the ways of Wall Street, there was not an education gap. I was well prepared, thanks to this great institution, and I hope each of you will take that to heart, and that as graduates of the State University of New York at Albany, you, too, will be well prepared to compete with the best and brightest around the world.”

Brown’s career highlights also include positions at Lehman Brothers, the U.S. Treasury, Morgan Stanley, and Bank of America, as well as service with President Barack Obama’s Treasury transition team. Worth magazine included her on its 2017 list of the top 100 most powerful men and women in global finance, noting, “Thanks to her hard-core financial background, Brown’s recommendations carry a lot of clout.”
