Hal R. Varian is the Chief Economist at Google, a position he has held since May 2002. He joined the company as a consultant and has been involved in various aspects of the organization, including auction design, econometric analysis, finance, corporate strategy, and public policy. In addition to his role at Google, Varian is an emeritus professor at the University of California, Berkeley, where he taught in three departments: business, economics, and information management. Varian received his Bachelor of Science degree from MIT in 1969 and his Master's and PhD degrees in mathematics and economics from UC Berkeley in 1973. He has also taught at several other universities around the world, including MIT, Stanford, Oxford, Michigan, and more. As a renowned economist, Varian is a fellow of the Guggenheim Foundation, the Econometric Society, and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was co-editor of the American Economic Review from 1987 to 1990 and holds honorary doctorates from the University of Oulu, Finland, and the University of Karlsruhe, Germany. Varian has published numerous papers in various fields, including economic theory, industrial organization, financial economics, econometrics, and information economics. He is also the author of two major economics textbooks that have been translated into 22 languages. Additionally, he co-authored a bestselling book on business strategy, Information Rules: A Strategic Guide to the Network Economy, and wrote a monthly column for the New York Times from 2000 to 2007.
