About Lang Lang Lang Lang is a famous Chinese pianist from Shenyang known for his charisma and global success. He studied at Beijing's Central Music Conservatory and the Curtis Institute of Music. Notable achievements include his 1999 debut at the Ravinia Festival and a performance at the 2008 Beijing Olympics. Lang Lang has collaborated with artists like Herbie Hancock and recorded albums such as Piano Book and The Disney Book for Deutsche Grammophon and Sony Classical. Lang Lang's illustrious career reached new heights with his acclaimed performance of Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto at the Ravinia Festival in Chicago. In 2001, he made a significant breakthrough by debuting at Carnegie Hall and touring to Beijing with the Philadelphia Orchestra, solidifying his international reputation. A year later, Lang Lang recorded the Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn piano concertos with Barenboim and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, receiving widespread critical acclaim. This success was followed by numerous notable performances and recordings, including his 2007 appearance at the Nobel Prize ceremonies in Stockholm, Sweden, and a performance viewed by over a billion people during the opening ceremonies of the 2008 Summer Olympics in Beijing. Lang Lang has also made significant contributions to music education and literature, penning an autobiography titled Journey of a Thousand Miles, as well as its children's version, Playing with Flying Keys. However, controversy erupted in 2011 when he performed My Motherland at the White House, sparking criticism for its potential anti-American connotations. Lang Lang has continued to release critically acclaimed recordings, including Lang Lang Live in Vienna and Two Concerti, which featured his collaboration with composer Howard Shore. In recent years, he has aimed for a broader audience, releasing survey albums devoted to Liszt, Chopin, and Mozart. His 2015 album Lang Lang in Paris was followed by New York Rhapsody in 2016, which showcased his crossover appeal. After a brief hiatus due to an injury, Lang Lang made a triumphant return to the stage in 2018 at the Tanglewood Festival with the Boston Symphony. He sealed his comeback with the Piano Book album, which reached number two on the Billboard Classical Albums chart. In subsequent years, he released The Disney Book and his first recording of Bach's Goldberg Variations, solidifying his status as one of the most versatile pianists of our time. Lang Lang's personal life has also been marked by notable milestones, including the birth of his child in 2021 and his wife Gina Alice's guest appearance on The Disney Book. Lang Lang is scheduled to perform in several cities across the world from July 31, 2025 to March 29, 2026. He will play a total of eight shows in seven cities, including Baden-Baden Festspielhaus Baden-Baden, Germany on March 29, 2026; Tucson Linda Ronstadt Music Hall, Arizona, United States on March 17, 2026 and The Linda Ronstadt Music Hall in Tucson on March 29, 2026. Lang Lang's tour starts at Pavilion at Ravinia in Highland Park, IL on July 31, 2025 and ends at The Linda Ronstadt Music Hall in Tucson, AZ on March 29, 2026. His concert schedule also includes shows in Interlochen, MI; Bremen, Germany; Atlanta, GA; Liverpool, ENG; Edinburgh, United Kingdom; and Beaver Creek, CO.
