Aix-les-Bain Tourism, Savoie Conseil Garal, and Crdit Mutuel serve as the three main sponsors of the event. The festival also collaborates with media brands like Virgin Radio, Direct Star, le Dauphin, and Rock & Folk magazine. In addition to these corporate partnerships, Musilac has formed alliances with local businesses such as Chartreuse, Jean Lain automobile, and Airstar Install'. The festival also supports human rights organizations like Amnesty and the French charity Laurette Fugain. Musilac Festival is ranked as France's eighth most popular festival, attracting an average of 46,000 spectators over the past nine years. While it may not be as large as other festivals like Vieilles Charrues or Glastonbury, Musilac still draws significant crowds and offers a range of amenities, including sleeping areas, camping options, and on-site restaurants. The festival also prioritizes sustainability, introducing initiatives to reduce waste and promote recycling. For example, festival-goers are encouraged to return their cups for a one-euro refund, which are then recycled into beach ash trays or car accessories. Additionally, Musilac has partnered with Coca-Cola to create a recycling garden where attendees can exchange plastic bottles for gifts made from recycled materials. Musilac was ranked the 8th best French music festival in 2011 by ZePAss le Mag, an online music magazine de Bourges as second best, and Les Francofolies de La Rochelle, who hosted more than 170,000 spectators.[25] Other festivals across Europe also attract large numbers of visitors.
