The Duke Blue Devils men's basketball program is actively searching for new talent and appears to have zeroed in on a promising 2025 prospect, Dame Sarr. According to reports, the Blue Devils hosted Sarr, a five-star shooting guard from Italy, for an official visit on Monday. As On3's No. 17 prospect, Sarr has garnered attention from top programs such as Oregon and Kansas. If he commits to Duke, he would be the fourth member of their incoming freshman class.Sarr's addition could potentially fill a spot in Duke's backcourt, as the team lost four starters following their impressive 202425 season run. The program is actively reloading its roster for the upcoming 202526 season, and Sarr's talent could be a major boost. His recent performances have generated buzz, with his breakout game at the Nike Hoop Summit showcasing his skills.Duke Looks to Fill Gaps with Braydon Hawthorne as Blue Devils Aim for Elite Status in College BasketballCameron Boozer, a highly touted freshman in Massachusetts, is considered the prized recruit for Duke in 2025. He is ranked second nationally and has been a standout performer at Columbus High School in Miami, averaging 22.2 points and 11.4 rebounds per game last season. His twin brother Carlos, a former Duke star, also has twin sons who could be playing for the Blue Devils in the future.Other notable recruits include Caleb Wilson, who committed to UNC but is still considering Duke; Koa Peat, a forward who picked up an offer from Duke; and Meleek Thomas, a guard who committed to Arkansas after receiving an offer from Duke.
