Caddyshack features a mix of characters and plotlines as it unfolds at Bushwood Country Club. The club is co-founded by Judge Elihu Smails and Danny Noonan, who volunteers to caddie for Smails despite their differences in personality. Meanwhile, the club's greenskeeper Carl Spackler struggles with killing a gopher that has been disrupting the course. As the Fourth of July approaches, Danny takes on various jobs including waitressing at the annual banquet where he meets Lacey Underall, Smails' niece and a beautiful young woman. Later in the year, Danny wins the Caddie Day golf tournament and is rewarded with an invitation to the christening ceremony for one of Smails' boats. However, things quickly take a turn when Czervik's antics disrupt the ceremony and cause destruction at the yacht club. Despite this chaos, Smails surprisingly demands that Danny keeps quiet about the incident in exchange for maintaining his scholarship. Smails also announces that Czervik will not be allowed to join the club as he is more interested in buying it than participating. After an insult-filled exchange, Czervik proposes a team golf match with Smails and Dr. Beeper against himself and Webb. They agree to wager $20,000 on the match, which quickly doubles. As the match progresses, Danny becomes frustrated with Smails' cheating ways and is eventually replaced by Czervik's partner Webb. However, just as all hope seems lost for Smails, he scores a birdie on the final hole and requires Danny to make a difficult putt to draw even. In his last-ditch effort to win, Danny takes on the ultimate challenge of making the putt from a precarious position. The chaos unfolds as Carl detonates explosives around the golf course, shaking the ground and causing Danny, Webb, and Czervik to secure a win. Meanwhile, Carl slips away unnoticed after witnessing the destruction he has caused. Unfazed by Smails' refusal to honor the bet, Czervik sends enforcers to collect his winnings from him. As the crowd gathers at the main house, Czervik announces that everyone will be enjoying some intimate moments soon. The crowd erupts in cheers. In another part of the course, a resilient gopher emerges unscathed and dances along to Kenny Loggins' "I'm Alright". A variety of characters are introduced as they navigate their relationships within Bushwood Country Club's exclusive community. The Caddyshack film was largely based on a young woman who inspired one of the main characters, Maggie, and an elderly couple, John and Ilma Haverkamp, struggling golfers who had been part of the club for years. In reality, director Harold Ramis witnessed an incident in which a golfer accidentally hit another player in the groin with a stray golf ball during one of his own rounds on a public nine-hole course.[7] Filming took place over 11 weeks in autumn 1979, but production was delayed due to Hurricane David in early September. Golf scenes were shot at the Rolling Hills Golf Club (now Grande Oaks) in Davie, Florida, which was chosen for its lack of palm trees, creating a Midwest-like atmosphere.[8] However, nearby explosions during filming caused a real-life airport scare when an incoming pilot suspected a plane had crashed.[9] The iconic Fourth of July dinner-and-dancing scene was filmed at the Boca Raton Hotel and Club in Florida. Ramis added a pivotal golf ball-shack-crashing scene after realizing his two biggest stars, Chevy Chase and Bill Murray, weren't sharing screen time together; they collaborated on the script during lunch.[10] Despite initial concerns about their working relationship due to past tensions from Saturday Night Live, both actors remained friendly and professional throughout the scene's writing and filming. This is the only film where Chase and Murray have appeared together. Much of Bill Murray's "Cinderella story" scene was improvised based on a few lines of stage direction, with him even hitting flowers with a whip while fantasizing about winning the Masters Tournament.[10] Due to his busy schedule on Saturday Night Live, Murray worked on the film for only six days and largely ad-libbed his lines.[7] In another instance, a massage scene between Chevy Chase and Cindy Morgan was improvised, with her genuine reaction to being doused in oil being "You're crazy!" Also noteworthy is that Cindy Morgan required assistance from a professional diver when she dove into the pool due to her legal blindness without contact lenses. Visual effects were handled by John Dykstra's company, including lightning, stormy skies, and disappearing flags. Caddyshack gained notoriety for excessive drug use on set, with Peter Berkrot likening cocaine to "the fuel that kept the film running". Locations used in the film included: * Noonan house – 232 North Avenue 54, Los Angeles * Bushwood gates – West Gate, Bel Air * Bushwood Country Club – Rolling Hills Golf Club, Davie, Florida (now Grande Oaks Golf Club) * Bushwood pool – Plantation Preserve Golf Course, Plantation, Florida * Czervik Condominiums – Century Hill Condominiums, Los Angeles (from Galaxy Way) * Rolling Lake Yacht Club – Rusty Pelican restaurant, Miami * Smails house – 4531 NE 25th Street, Fort Lauderdale Caddyshack was released on July 25, 1980, in 656 theaters and initially underwhelmed critics. However, it eventually made $39,846,344 in North America and $60 million worldwide. Upon its release, the film received mixed reviews from critics. Roger Ebert gave it two-and-a-half stars out of four, while Gene Siskel awarded it three stars, stating that "it's funny about half of the time it tries to be." The Chicago Reader's Dave Kehr criticized Harold Ramis' direction, saying the picture "lurches from style to style and collapses between sitcom and sketch farce." Despite initial criticism, Caddyshack has since gained a cult following and been positively reappraised by many film critics. Review aggregator Rotten Tomatoes holds an approval rating of 73% based on 62 reviews, with an average score of 6.60/10. Caddyshack was a hit in Denmark and also achieved success outside of the US. However, it's worth noting that not everyone found the film to its liking, with some people panning the movie.[28] The film underwent editing to emphasize Bill Murray's character, with 20 minutes being cut for this purpose.[29] As a result, Caddyshack is now ranked as one of the funniest movies of all time by Bravo and has also been listed in various American Film Institute lists. These include: AFI's 100 Years...100 Laughs – #71,[31] AFI's 100 Years...100 Movie Quotes with Carl Spackler's iconic line ranking at #92,[32] and being ranked as the #7 Sports Film on AFI's 10 Top 10 list.[33] In anticipation of Caddyshack's release, a soundtrack was released featuring Kenny Loggins' hit single "I'm Alright," which became a top ten hit in September 1980.[34] The film also had a sequel called Caddyshack II, but it received mixed reviews and is often cited as one of the worst sequels ever made.[35] However, Caddyshack's legacy continues to be celebrated. In 2007, Taylor Trade Publishing released an illustrated paperback retrospective on the movie,[36] and in 2018, Flatiron Books published a book detailing the making of the film.[37] Additionally, Bill Murray and his brothers opened a themed restaurant inspired by the movie at the World Golf Village in Florida in 2001. The restaurant is a tribute to the fictional Bushwood Country Club and has become a beloved destination for fans of the film. Caddyshack's impact on popular culture cannot be overstated, with many of its iconic quotes becoming ingrained in everyday conversation.[40] Merchandise based on the movie is still widely available today,[41][42] including FunkoPop figures released in 2019. Even Tiger Woods has expressed his admiration for the film and has referenced it in a commercial he starred in.[44] The University of Minnesota uses the movie as part of their dance sport ritual, encouraging fans to "Do the Gopher" during collegiate sports games.[46] The Dalai Lama was even mentioned in an interview by Bret Baier on Fox News, referencing a comical scene from the film.
